INTRODUCTION

The following story of the origins of V2k mind-control is based on the activities of the inventor of V2k, Dr Henry Karl Puharich, a medical practitioner, inventor, military intelligence professional and writer. It is based on three works of non-fiction about his life, written by various authors.

The first of these is a biography of Henry K Puharich's life, called Memories of a Maverick, written by HGM "Bep" Hermans, Puharich's second wife, who believed in him absolutely as a stellar scientific pillar of the community. It was written in 1997, after Puharich died in 1995. The biography is for sale, but can also be downloaded free from various sources on the Web, including the Electric Angel server. [Memories of a Maverick] (1.09Mb)

The second is titled The Stargate Conspiracy, a commercially-available book written by authors Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince in 1999. Picknett and Prince are well-respected British authors who have researched and written several books on what they term "religious and historical mysteries". [Available on Amazon.com]

On the "about" page of their website, the two authors state that The Stargate Conspiracy is about "the hijacking of the myths of ancient Egypt by intelligence agencies".

But what Picknett and Prince don't know - for no reason other than they are not Targeted Individuals - is that a portion of The Stargate Conspiracy is actually about the hijacking of the myths of ancient Egypt by one of the greatest and most dangerous charlatans of our time, Henry K Puharich: inventor of V2k mind-control; the man who sold the world into bio-technological slavery without reflecting on the moral and ethical implications of making such a sale.

Henry K Puharich is not generally known to Targeted Individuals, even though he was a celebrity scientist, inventor and author. As a public figure, he was most famous for two significant literary works, The Sacred Mushroom: Key to the Door of Eternity and Beyond Telepathy, two titles written at a time in history when psychic communication, spiritualism and other metaphysical arts were exceedingly popular.

Indeed, Targeted Individuals may be wondering what Henry K Puharich has to do, not only with Electronic Harassment and perpetrators, but with the myths of ancient Egypt.

As a philosopher and intellectual, Puharich was a man ahead of his time; a pioneer in future sciences, whose lynchpin mind-control invention is woven into the very fabric of the spiritualism movement of the 1950s and 1960s and the popular New Age movement of the 1970s, hence the title of Picknett and Prince's book, The Stargate Conspiracy.

The third item of literary, historical and societal significance is a short but extremely important manuscript written by investigator Terry L Milner in 1996, the year after Puharich died, called Ratting out Puharich. The manuscript, written with an obvious and palpable sense of urgency in the interest of educating the public, has been available - but arguably ignored - for the past 20 years.

The manuscript can be downloaded free of charge from the Electric Angel server [Ratting out Puharich] (141kb) and I urge all Targeted Individuals to read it in-depth, as it provides a detailed account of the inception of Electronic Harassment not written by myself, but one very concerned citizen with a serious need to talk about Puharich.

Terry L Milner wrote the manuscript while information on Puharich was still fresh in his mind and he furthermore vowed to write a full book about Puharich's activities, tentatively titled Andrija, Aliens and the Square Wave but never went on to do so, presumably because Milner never uncovered enough evidence - circumstantial or otherwise - of Puharich's mind-control invention, to publish such a book.

Mr Milner could go no further because the missing pieces of Puharich's activities, published in The Radiohead Protocol, could only be determined by a victim of V2k mind-control; a client of Puharich's invention; by investigating and resurrecting a classified and largely forgotten piece of American history that doesn't appear in mainstream history books, much less in the popular narrative about Puharich or by his own admission.

Between these manuscripts, books and biographies, dated 1997, 1999 and 1996, and now, The Radiohead Protocol (2016) there is ample documentary evidence to incriminate Henry K Puharich (called Andrija by the other writers) as the inventor of V2k mind-control and Electronic Harassment used on Targeted Individuals.

CHAPTER 1

Memories of a Maverick by Bep Hermans, Puharich's Second Wife

One could say that Bep Hermans, Puharich's second wife, knew Puharich better from a personal perspective than anyone else. She was a younger woman who had a relationship with him that spanned around 40 years and she posthumously wrote Puharich's biography based almost entirely - and unbeknown to her - on a life simply dedicated to V2k mind-control experimentation.

The posthumous memoir and biography of her erstwhile husband, Memories of a Maverick, chronicles Henry K Puharich's life - his early life, in particular - in chronological order, making the extremely complex story of his life and work easier to understand.

One could also say that a wife knows a husband best; that Bep Hermans suspected the secrets that her husband kept so well; secrets he withheld from the general public, without Bep particularly wishing to acknowledge such indicators, or being too naive to contemplate them.

So, with this in mind, we move along to the foreword of Puharich's biography, written by one Andrew Michrowski, which states:

Andrija [Henry K Puharich] was an independent agent working in the field of science, essentially self-financed... vistas in biology, botany, electro-chemistry, parapsychology, astrophysical sciences, electrical and electronic engineering, and sub-atomic physics....

Puharich studied the inner biological workings of mind-and-body, the biology and electrochemistry of the mind/body connection, the paranormal and astrophysical, while having the necessary knowledge of electronic engineering and subatomic physics to produce the effects of V2k; furthermore understanding the range of biological frequencies that facilitate Electronic Harassment and mind-control, in human subjects.

The writer of the Foreword, Mr Michrowski, went on to describe Puharich as "... enriching the lives of hundreds of millions worldwide, from the hearing-impaired [to] the environmentally-sensitive..." and "... a man who helped bring to us a better future, with love", mistaking the inventor of V2k mind-control, the old Git, for a humanitarian and saint.

In reality, Puharich never enriched the lives of any person on planet Earth. He was evidently an intellectually gifted individual, but instead of creating a better future for all with his intellectual gifts, he brought to us - not only Targeted Individuals but all of humanity - a worse future, a dark future full of torture and death and despair.

Now perpetrators have taken over from him as the new villains, perpetrating Puharich's V2k filth on humanity and spreading it to all the lands. They've been using his invention for a long time - around 40 to 50 years - to torture and mind-control human beings, and have never been stopped by ordinary means.

After Puharich died and Bep Hermans sat down to write his biography, she contemplated Puharich's intellect, integrity and the nature of his invention.

... I had admired his brilliant mind, and begged him to use it for research that would benefit mankind.

For a while he did, when he and a friend worked on a hearing aid that would give sound a new route to the brain - through the teeth and facial nerves.

Bep was afraid Puharich might do something to harm humanity; she had the distinct impression, dare I say a woman's intuition, that he was not averse to causing harm. However, by the time Bep begged Puharich to do good by humanity, he and his "friend" were already V2k perpetrators and had been for quite some time, with no intention of dropping mind-control in the interest of safer communities.

But Puharich could not confess the wicked truth, not even to his wife. As an intelligence professional, he no doubt signed the necessary non-disclosure agreement with an intelligence agency or agencies that is still in effect to this very day, more than two decades after his death.

Early Life and Psychological Profile

Henry K Puharich was born on February 19, 1918 in Chicago. He was a Yugoslavian and the son of an illegal immigrant; his father entered the United States as a stowaway in 1912. According to Bep, Puharich's father, Franjo Puharich, was a bully who used a whip on him, at which time he "suffered severely".

I'll go out on a limb and say that an abused childhood could be a recipe for sociopathic behavior. A young, highly intelligent Puharich being constantly intimidated by a father cracking a whip may have had a profound and disastrous psychological effect on Henry K Puharich the adult, followed by a devastating - uttermost devastating - knock-on effect on society.

And although I am not a psychologist but merely an investigative journalist and V2k mind-control survivor, I would furthermore make the observation that one of the hallmarks of a sociopath is the ability to hide any lurking sociopathic tendencies under a veneer of civility, worldliness and charm.

Sociopaths are adept at charming people and hiding the awful truth that they care, not only about themselves and no one else, but that they will actively - moreover than negligently - harm others, while doing everything in their power to get away with the deplorable. They might even go so far as to portray themselves as the hero in a scenario, if at all possible.

The story to be told of Henry K Puharich is one of an active sociopath, who invented V2k and practiced predatory mind-control on people in plain sight. At the same time, he evaded accountability for years and decades, similar to the way in which Perpetrators now practice V2k while enjoying a lack of accountability and post-attack detection. (See The Truth Will Set You Free for the attractiveness of committing V2k as a crime).

Throughout the mind-control decades, the bulk of the literature written by and about Puharich portrays him as a bringer of light ("a man who helped bring to us a better future, with love”). And while Puharich was indeed a pioneer (a forerunner, not the radio brand), as perpetuated in his own books and by the media, few have dared to take on Puharich’s secret V2k invention with the expectation of winning.

Early Education and Language Proficiency

As a child, Puharich attended a number of public schools until graduating from grammar school in 1932. He went to high school, then dropped out to work on a farm, but eventually graduated in 1938 after being persuaded to finish high school by a parish priest.

Before and after graduating from high school, it is not just interesting, but of vital importance to note and understand that Puharich was proficient in the English language.

At the age of 18, Puharich was already the sports editor for a Chicago newspaper, an early achievement. But our first example of Puharich’s excellence in English is found in 1937, when he won second prize in the Cook County Oratorical Contest.

He gave a speech titled Washington the Leader, demonstrating his outstanding skills as a spokesman. In 1938, he won first prize in an essay contest titled If Lincoln Could Speak Today, further showcasing his skills as a writer. In the same year he received a certificate of honorable mention for his “wholesome and honest opinion about America” in an American Youth Forum competition. And in September of the same year, he received a letter from the Governor of Illinois himself, congratulating Puharich on winning a prize for an essay he wrote on the Constitution of the United States in a state-wide competition.

The reason why it is so important to acknowledge Puharich as having a high level of English literacy and language proficiency is three-fold. The first, and by far the most urgent reason, is that Puharich, in later years, based his V2k mind-control word-delivery (the voices heard during voice-to-skull) on a language principle called Spondaics or Spondee.

Spondee has to do with the breaking up of words into accented syllable portions, so that each syllable can be used independently, or recombined with other syllables, under specific electronic and electromagnetic conditions, to deliver a word or word formation constituting a sentence, directly to the hearing centers of the brain in a V2k subject.

The second reason, and one that is least apparent, is that language, moreover the English language, was - and is - used as a favoured tool by mind-controllers. During his lifetime, Puharich and his associates spoke in an exclusive and duplicitous manner common to the intelligence agencies in general and mind-controllers in particular.

The third reason is that language has, since the inception of V2k, been used not only as a tool but as an immaculate weapon against Targeted Individuals. Essentially, voice-to-skull is an intelligent language program that turns pre-defined diction and grammar into a weapon with no limits.

When Puharich was in his senior year of high school, he was president of the Student Council. And when Bep Hermans wrote Puharich’s biography based on his personal stack of papers, she penned the following gem:

Not only was young Henry a bright kid, he was also very handsome, with somewhat Slavic features, deep-set sky-blue eyes and a shock of jet-black hair. In addition, he was popular, as the poster I found in his scrapbook proves. Underneath a drawing of him it says:

IT'S A CRIME IF YOU DON'T VOTE FOR PUHARICH
THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE

This shows just how formidable Puharich was at a young age; handsome and popular. He was a writer and a smooth talker, a poster boy for future potential or one most likely to succeed.

But if you allow me to re-write the accolade and give it a simpler meaning, more suitable to the V2k experience, it goes from this...

IT'S A CRIME ~~IF YOU DON'T VOTE FOR PUHARICH~~
THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE

... to simply this:

IT'S A CRIME, PEOPLE

Premeditation to Commit Mind-Control

In July 1938, Puharich was awarded an undergraduate scholarship to attend the College of Liberal Arts of North-Western University, where he studied from the age of 20 and remained for four years. During that time his extracurricular activities included the Classical Languages Society, consistent with his proficiency and interest in language.

He received his Bachelor of Arts in 1942 with a major in philosophy and a minor in pre-medical subjects. The fact that Puharich majored in philosophy shows an early leaning toward the esoteric and the paranormal, or the possibilities of such fields of study.

It was during his final year that he wrote a philosophical piece called "An intellectual autobiography of Henry Puharich", in which he stated:

I would venture to say that nobody really knows another's mind thoroughly, and I would further venture that very few people really know their own mind. It would certainly be a great step forward for many of us if we could sit down and untangle the jungle that is our mind, and then understand those processes by which we judge and study others. If I could do a good job of a task like this, understanding the nature of man's consciousness, I would feel that I had passed a great milestone in my education.

It is clear that Henry K Puharich, at the youthful age of 24, was contemplating the sanctity of the human mind in his autobiography; or more specifically, a way to get around (untangle) the constitutionally-enshrined right to mental privacy, in order to go inside the mind of another and know it thoroughly; to breach this sanctity.

Venturing to say that "nobody really knows another's mind" constitutes a red flag in terms of Puharich's future activities. It indicates Puharich's early intent to commit mind-control; the beginning of a V2k quest that lasted a lifetime and now equates to 21st century perpetrators who are known as the "thought police".

It was during the same year, 1942, that Puharich wrote his Dynamics Theory, an early form of his Theory of Nerve Conduction on which the principle of V2k is based. I have divided his theory into two parts:

Part one:

I visualize the human nervous system as being imbedded in the cell tissue of the body just as the roots of a tree are imbedded in the ground which gives it nourishment. One end of the nervous system we recognize as being in the brain. It is here that all of the messages from the body and the sense organs are localized. The other end of the nervous system is imbedded directly in cell tissue through a countless number of fine nerve endings. These nerve endings end in cup shaped groups of cells called blastulas. And it is very difficult to distinguish where nerve fibers end and where cell tissue begins. Both have a function to perform in keeping the flame of life [life] alive. According to this conception it is quite plain that the flow of cell generated energy is primarily a one-way flow to the brain. This primary flow however has some tributaries, which return the energy to the muscles, and other parts of the body. This can be easily illustrated by the fact that a man can drive himself beyond his normal capacities by the force of will, which to my way of thinking is nothing more than the conscious diversion of this primary flow of cell energy back into the body, plus the well known accompanying physiological functions such as the dynamic tension of the muscles, adrenaline flow, liver release of blood, etc. The point that I am trying to establish is that the brain is an area wherein is localized the cell energy of the body. I shall label this cell energy "dynamics".

Part two:

I further venture to say that transference of dynamics from one person to another is possible. We all know that there are people who can thrill and exhilarate one, and that there are others who simply bore and fatigue one. This implies that there is a wireless, touch-less transfer of this vital substance. If dynamics can be transferred from one organism to another, why cannot that other function of the mind - thought, also be transferred from one mind to another mind? It is also conceivable that dynamics not only passes freely between persons, but also dissipates out into the atmosphere.

To the uninitiated, the above passages appear to have something to do with common biology. But in reality part one of the Dynamics Theory constitutes the beginning phase of invasive mind- and body-control, to which contemporary Targeted Individuals are subjected by perpetrators.

In part two of Puharich's Dynamics Theory, the reader can furthermore determine the theoretical foundation of mind-reading (thought transference from one person to another), in which Targeted Individuals have their minds read in a phenomenon now called "synthetic telepathy".

Medical School/Army Medical Corps and Internship

After receiving his Bachelor of Arts in Philosophy and the minor in pre-medical subjects, Puharich continued to study at North-Western University, this time at the university's medical school, from March 1943 to March 1946.

According to Bep Hermans' biography, Puharich was, at the same time as being a student, also a commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Army, since 1943. In fact, authors Picknett and Prince stated that he graduated under a US Army training scheme, meaning that the military financed Puharich's studies.

In the words of the author of the manuscript, Terry L Milner, Puharich was a "Private" in the Medical Corps. Ostensibly he was on standby or on call during the Second World War, waiting to replace or augment other medical personnel who were serving during the war, at any time that the military might call him up for active duty.

According to Milner in Ratting out Puharich:

...The army had picked up a number of promising individuals to participate in what was then called the Army Specialized Training Program... so Andrija received his medical education compliments of the United States Government who picked up the tab...

And while Puharich was studying at medical school and on standby with the military, he perfected his Dynamics Theory (parts one and two), as recorded by Milner:

It was while he was at Northwestern that Andrija put his mental-pedal to the mental-metal and came up with his Theory of Nerve Conduction.

As you may recall, I have already stated that V2k is based on the Theory of Nerve Conduction, a concept rooted in Puharich's classical understanding of philosophy and practical experience as a pre-graduate medical professional. It was also around this time that Puharich, again in the words of Milner, started experimenting with frequencies.

Andrija busied himself there [at North-Western University] easing animals into sleep with low frequency square waves and then operating on them.

Puharich's experimentation with sleep frequencies on animals should be sharply noted by Targeted Individuals because it served as a precursor to sleep deprivation, a form of torture commonly reported by victims throughout the V2k decades.

In 1946, Puharich graduated from North-Western University not only as a doctor, but a specialist medical practitioner, a neurologist, according to The Stargate Conspiracy, having already made a sponsored, but not yet verifiably sinister, migration of his academic life to a military/government environment three years earlier.

Bep Hermans, Puharich's second wife, went on to say in her biography that Puharich married his first wife, nicknamed Jinny (her name was Virginia, according to Terry L Milner), the daughter of a well-known doctor, in 1943, at the same time as starting medical school and being a Private in the military. This turns out to be significant as well as tragic, as we will see what happened to Virginia "Jinny" Puharich later in the story.

In 1947, Puharich did his internship, as all graduate doctors are lawfully required to do, at the Kaiser Permanente Foundation Hospital in Oakland, California. It was in this year that he wrote to the director of the hospital, saying:

The nervous system is the most fruitful field of study at the present time. I am convinced that the answers to many questions lie in the nature of the nervous system, and its sensitivity to forces coming from without, some of which we already know, but most of which are unknown. The study of this polar system is to be my work.

Puharich was abidingly interested in the nervous system, and especially “its sensitivity to forces coming from without”. He was planning to experiment with stimuli to the nervous system “from without”, in addition to wanting to “sit down” with another’s mind, by his own admission. Studying this “polar system” was to be his life work; another red flag in Puharich’s vocational trajectory towards inventing V2k mind-control.

After Puharich finished his medical internship, he was drafted to the military to do a standard two-year tour of duty. However, he received a medical discharge due to a “chronic middle-ear infection” and left to pursue medical research in biophysics, a relatively new field of study at the time.

Albeit “biophysics” is a particularly broad term that fails to specify what Puharich would be researching; the first of many such sufficiently broad terms employed as euphemisms in connection with the establishment of V2k mind-control.

At the same time it appears that Puharich parted ways with the military in order to research biophysics. On paper, he had an honourable medical discharge but in reality, he already had deep intellectual and academic ties to the military from which he had received free specialized education as a gifted and promising individual; with a promising payback to the military in due course.

In other words, the academic ties with the military endured during the early phases of the development of V2k while Puharich was ostensibly a civilian, portraying himself as such in the interest of non-disclosure and maintaining confidentiality.

The Round Table Foundation

It was also around 1947, after he left both his internship and apparently the military, that Puharich met one of his father’s old Yugoslavian friends, world-famous violinist Zlatko Balokovic and his wife Joyce at their home in Camden, Maine. It was there that Joyce, a member of the wealthy Borden family of Chicago who was clearly at the forefront of spiritualism, first introduced Puharich to ESP (extrasensory perception) and the concept of telepathy.

The concept was ostensibly new to Puharich yet strikingly similar to his Dynamics Theory (part two), in which it was theoretically possible to transfer thoughts from one person to another, and have the second person “voice” the thoughts of the first.

But investigator Terry L Milner, who described Puharich as “crafty”, insisted that Puharich knew about ESP before he even met the Balokovics:

He credits them [the Balokovics] with having introduced him to the subject of ESP... [But] I have a document which clearly states his intent to investigate the area prior to meeting the Balokovics. This document also reveals that he was already familiar with [parapsychologist and author] JB Rhine's explorations in this area.

With his Dynamics Theory of thought transference dovetailing seamlessly with JB Rhine and Joyce Balokovic's belief in the existence of telepathy, Puharich moved to the Balokovic's guesthouse in Camden, where he started a non-profit organization called The Round Table Foundation.

According to The Stargate Conspiracy and other sources, Puharich ran The Round Table Foundation (its full name was The Round Table Foundation of Electrobiolgy) from 1948 until 1958. It was a private paranormal research center, where Puharich experimented with a number of famous psychics, consistent with the psychical (parapsychology) research he claimed to be doing. I will discuss the parade of psychics later.

In their book, Picknett and Prince describe The Round Table Foundation as a front for intelligence activities. But the fronting actually went deeper than that. Puharich was a neurologist who, based on his formidable knowledge of the physical nervous system of the human brain, was in the active, beginning stages of inventing mind-control.

The Round Table Foundation of Electrobiolgy was thus specifically a front for the invention of V2k and the ongoing research and development of mind-control. The psychics who featured so prominently throughout Puharich's career were simply used as decoys to mimic the output of mind-control or as unwitting victims in his V2k research.

Electrobiolgy: 1948

The years 1948 to 1949 were particularly busy ones for Puharich in the development of V2k mind-control. It was during this ambit that his operational base was in Camden at the invitation of the Balokovics. But the town in Maine turned out to be significant to the development of V2k for one reason in particular.

It was during this time that Puharich had a documented association with three felonious professionals, both in Camden and New York, who were pivotal to the invention of V2k. The portion that follows is essentially about the three men whose respective disciplines helped Puharich achieve V2k mind-control and whose expertise, when combined, formed the physical foundation of the invention.

According to Bep Hermans' biography based on his journal, Puharich obtained the use of a barn in a nearby forest and outfitted it into a laboratory. Puharich was so "determined" to have a research facility, that he embraced sub-zero temperatures of the Maine winter in order to build partitions and benches, etc, for the facility.

Once the laboratory was complete, Puharich's first order of business was to get funds so that he could start a nerve-research program on animals. By June 1949, his mentors and old family friends, the Balokovics, had organized, through their wealthy network of friends, funding for Puharich's research in the amount of $13000. In a few months, three research assistants came to Maine to work for him. They collected and “populated” the barn with sheep, goats, dogs, rat and mice for the proposed nerve research.

With funding, research assistants and the barn animals in attendance, Bep testified as to what Puharich did at the barn:

Curiously enough, the first research Andrija did was with Dr. Samuel Rosen, a New York hearing specialist... What Dr. Rosen wanted to test on animals was his theory on the cause of conductive deafness.

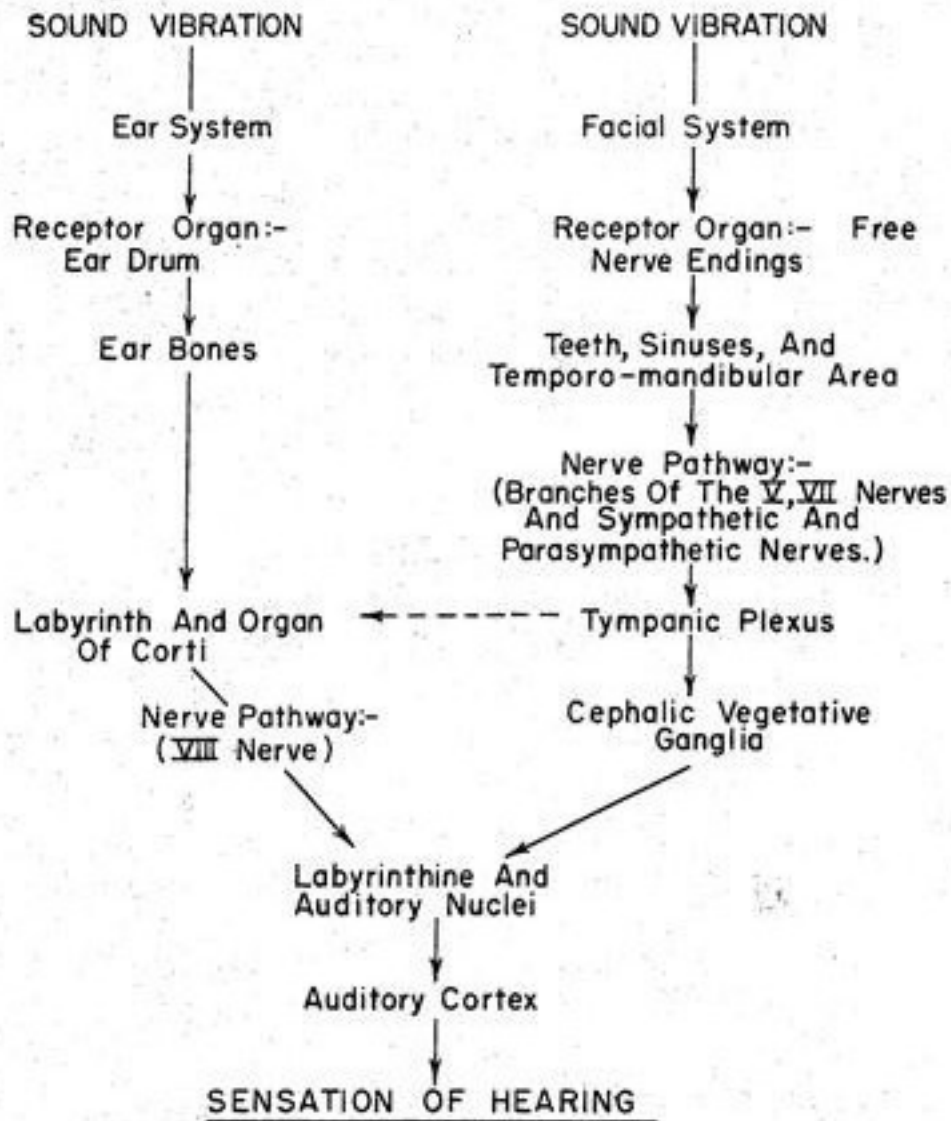

Puharich had invited Dr Samuel Rosen, a hearing specialist, to join him in his forest barn laboratory to do vivisection, something which investigator Terry L Milner disliked a great deal. Targeted Individuals should thus take note of the fact that brutal animal experimentation took place in the name of creating V2k; that unethical practice was employed right from the very beginning of V2k.

Bep Hermans used the words “curiously enough”. Indeed, Bep did not understand how Puharich’s Theory of Nerve Conduction and Dr Rosen’s theory on the cause of conductive deafness could be related to one another; how these two areas of interest could converge.

Presumably the animal research done by Puharich and Dr Rosen at the forest laboratory was conducted in tandem, meaning that the doctors were working apart, while sharing information that would be mutually beneficial to their respective research objectives.

Both doctors were, in fact, in the beginning phases of major discoveries, leading to inventions. Dr Rosen was interested in the normal hearing system of a subject in order to figure out the cause of conductive deafness. Puharich was also interested in hearing, but of a different kind. He was interested in what he called a “dormant” hearing system, as the following diagram, provided by Puharich himself, illustrates:

The image shows that there are two - not one - hearing systems in a human being. The first, in the left-hand column, is the legitimate ear-hearing system that Dr Rosen was researching. The right-hand column, however, is a hearing system that the ordinary man in the street is not aware of. It is a hearing system that Targeted Individuals should be made aware of with urgency: a dormant facial hearing system discovered by Puharich!

In the normal ear-hearing system, sound vibrations enter the ear system through the receptor organ, the ear drum, where they are conveyed via the ear bones to the labyrinth and organ or Corti and along the VIII nerve pathway. In Puharich's model on the right, sound vibrations enter the facial system through the receptor organ, the free nerve endings of the dental nerves and nerves of the sinuses and temporomandibular areas of the face.

In the facial model, the sound vibrations travel along the nerve pathways of the V and VII nerves, as well as the sympathetic and parasympathetic nerves to the tympanic plexus and cephalic vegetative ganglia. Note the dotted line from the tympanic plexus on the right-hand side to the labyrinth and organ of Corti on the left side.

The dotted line indicates where the ear-hearing and dormant facial hearing systems intersect, because the organ of Corti can be used as an ancillary organ when activating or initiating the facial system as an alternative hearing system, although the two systems can be described as being sufficiently parallel to one another, according to Puharich.

What started as sound vibrations in both ear and facial systems then travel through the auditory nuclei and cortex to ultimately produce the desired outcome: the sensation of hearing in the brain, or the brain interpreting the presence of vibrations as sound.

Let's go on to see what became of Puharich and Dr Rosen's mutual research at the forest laboratory, starting with Dr Rosen:

A few years later he [Dr Rosen] got world acclaim for his Stapes Mobilization Surgery, making it possible for millions of people to hear again.

Whereas for Puharich:

The transdermal device (hearing aid) which Andrija developed later... became suspicious... technology... used for adverse purposes.

Dr Samuel Rosen went on to actually "[make] it possible for millions of people to hear again" using a revolutionary new surgical procedure called "Rosen Stapes". Puharich, during the research ambit and in contrast to Dr Rosen, committed another fraud, his second, after first setting up the Round Table Foundation as a fraudulent intelligence front for V2k.

In his latest fraud, Puharich, too, claimed to be a champion of the hearing impaired; that he invented a hearing aid which subsequently enriched the lives of hundreds of millions worldwide (with love, no less).

However even Bep Hermans, Puharich's second wife, wasn't convinced of his hearing aid claim, prompting her to write in Memories of a Maverick:

I must add that... I have never heard of anyone's hearing being restored by Andrija's transdermal device. And this poses a serious question - what has been done with the technology?

Unbeknown to Bep, Puharich had recognized the might of the dormant facial hearing system in a nefarious mind-control application. Targeted Individuals should be aware of the fact that this research conducted by Puharich is also partially responsible for the name of the invention. The "V2" part of the term "V2k" is a direct reference to the nerve expressed as "VII", a portion of the dormant facial hearing system, loved by Puharich.

I must say that identifying and utilizing a secret, parallel, dormant, facial hearing system unknown to the general public is deeply unethical from a human rights perspective. And thus it is my responsibility to expose the dormant hearing system that can potentially be used to convey predatory sound directly to the human brain, in a V2k application.

The image of the two hearing systems can be found in Puharich's first patent of the V2k invention series numbered 2995633 and called Means for Aiding Hearing. The use of the dormant facial nervous system in V2k is documented as the first key in The 7 Keys to V2k, the first book in the V2k trilogy series.

Camden's Crystal Works

In his manuscript, Rating out Puharich, investigator Terry L Milner says that Puharich's home town of Camden, although a small and seemingly inconsequential town in Maine, housed a manufacturing facility that produced crystals, reportedly for the government and ostensibly for commercial use in sound equipment, such as hearing aids and also radios.

This is where Puharich started to collaborate with one of three professional associates, the other being Dr Samuel Rosen, already discussed. According to Milner:

Certainly worthy of mention, although it never was by Puharich, is that another business was located in that tiny town [Camden]. The enterprise, at that time, was one of only three such plants in the country. Not only was it special in being a one-of-only-three endeavors we find that the man who ran it was [a well] experienced professional at carrying out secret work.

This successful and accomplished inventor, Dr Raymond C Tibbets had invented such items as the first combination radio and record player... Of more interest to our story he ran a manufacturing facility right there in Camden which turned out sound converting crystals. By 1945 Tibbets had already carried out confidential war time work for the US Signal Corps, the British Ministry of Supplies, the National Defence Council [etc]... His research work was given priority... assigned to [only] a limited number of facilities throughout the United States and... Considered important; big time.

In 1948 when Andrija came to town the plant, then three years old, was turning out 50000 crystals a year from a 7000 square foot facility... The crystals were piezoelectric; that is to say they generated electricity when sound waves struck them. The average thickness of each crystal was 12/1000th of an inch, about the size of three sheets of paper pressed together.

The lion's share of the output went into hearing aid microphones although the crystals could be and were used in any kind of radio.

It is worth noting, at the end of Mr Milner's story above, that Puharich never mentioned the plant or facility; that he would have buried any mention of it whatsoever had it not been for Mr Milner, investigator, as the following story will explain.

Puharich, affectionately called "Dr Hank" by the residents of Camden who accidentally supported the development of his mind-control invention believing it was a hearing aid, forged an association with Dr Raymond C Tibbets. Both Puharich and Tibbets were graduate doctors and both already had established dealings with the US military, and upon scrutiny, with military intelligence.

It was there, at the early electronics factory of radio equipment, where Puharich first came into contact with four important concepts, presumably shown to him by Dr Tibbets and other staff members at the facility.

In the first concept, Puharich became acquainted with the theory of piezoelectricity, in which crystals and certain crystals in particular, are used in a sound-converting application. The theory of piezoelectricity and the nature of piezoelectric materials have already been extensively discussed in The Truth Will Set You Free.

In the second concept, Puharich learnt about radios and sound-recording equipment, and moreover a combination unit invented by Dr Tibbets that was commercial in nature, or produced for sale in retail shops.

In the third concept, Puharich presumably learnt the theory and practice of signalling equipment and how to send and receive radio signals not of a commercial nature.

Dr Raymond C Tibbets had previously conducted top-secret war-time work for the Signal Corps of the US military. According to sources on the internet, the Signal Corps acts under the instructions of military intelligence. The non-commercial nature of the radio signals sent and received by Tibbets' equipment were thus of a military intelligence grade.

And in the fourth and final concept, Puharich was shown how to manipulate crystal material at a molecular level in order to produce the sound equipment that Tibbets manufactured, such as the type used in hearing aids and radios.

The technique of manipulating crystal material at a molecular level is called nanotechnology, or in this particular instance, micro-technology, a larger version of it; the bigger brother of nanotechnology.

The type of micro-technology practiced at the facility in Camden is furthermore called thin-film fabrication, an early and basic form of the technology employed to produce semiconductor components ultimately used in sound equipment. Another term for semiconductor material or micro-technology is "solid state".

Puharich spoke about piezoelectric semiconductor material in his first and second patents but especially in his second, numbered 3156787: Solid State Hearing System. In his patent, Puharich referred to the crystals as R-F (radio frequency) resonant crystals and talked about crystals such as silicon, germanium and carborundum, and piezoelectric crystal and ceramic composites, such as lead zirconate titanate (PZT) and barium titanate.

As we have already noted from the research done with hearing specialist Dr Samuel Rosen, and subsequent diagram showing the two hearing systems, Puharich wasn't too interested in Dr Rosen's ear-hearing system. He was interested in the parallel, dormant facial hearing system and the ancillary organ of Corti, of which he spoke extensively in his first patent.

And in the second patent of his invention series, Puharich went on to discuss the next phase of the V2k invention. In the second phase, he would turn the secretive, dormant facial hearing system, a discovery that filled Puharich with excitement, into a solid-state hearing system.

What this means is that he was putting the micro-technology semiconductor solid-state material that Dr Raymond C Tibbets showed him, on the dormant facial hearing system of a human being that he had discovered in his breakthrough medical research.

According to the diagram of the two hearing systems, the micro-technology would start on the free nerve endings of the teeth, sinuses and temporomandibular areas. Then it would be put all over branches of the V (trigeminal) and VII (facial) nerves and the sympathetic and parasympathetic nerves. It would go on the tympanic plexus and labyrinth and organ of Corti. Finally it would be found on the cephalic vegetative ganglia, the labyrinthine and auditory nuclei and ultimately, the auditory cortex.

The end result of this would be sound delivered directly to the human brain; sound that did not originate at the ear, but from the nerves of the teeth, sinuses and jaw, along with the organ of Corti. In simple and easily explainable terms, Puharich turned the facial hearing system into a radio. Whereas the military call V2k a “device”, a more accurate term would be “appliance” because essentially Puharich invented solid-state face radio.

Investigator Terry L Milner traced the origin of Puharich’s voice-to-skull capabilities back to the electronics facility in Maine, having said in his manuscript, Rating out Puharich:

Considering the type of projects Andrija would be getting up to, one would have to consider that plant [in Camden] very handy. I hear voices but there is no one there!

In his first patent, Means for Aiding Hearing, Puharich committed a third fraud, or radical misrepresentation of the facts. Throughout the patent, Puharich spoke extensively about a tooth or teeth, saying that piezoelectric material would be attached to the nerves of a tooth or plurality of teeth. Attachment could be achieved after the tooth was suitably “denuded” to expose the nerves.

It should be noted that Puharich deliberately exaggerated the visual aspect of patent 2995633 in which the images are mostly of teeth. The teeth depicted are large and detailed; what might be described as a red herring or misdirection that’s fatal to the understanding of those not party to the intelligence fraud.

In accordance with the duplicitous nature of mind-control, the repetitive appearance of the giant tooth in the patent images means quite the opposite. Essentially the proportions envisaged by Puharich were not large but very small; what he called “micro-miniature”, a reference to the use of micro-technology on the dental nerves.

There are a number of instances within the patent where Puharich used duplicitous language and lateral concepts, such as making reference to a set of dentures (false teeth). If you read between the lines, Puharich was saying that teeth are not required for the invention to work; even a person with no teeth of their own is a biological candidate, outfitted with dental nerves and so on at birth, constituting the dormant facial hearing system.

It should firstly be noted by Targeted Individuals that in the 21st century, perpetrators do not make use of the crystals and ceramics used by Puharich in the early days of V2k, such as silicon, carborundum and lead zirconate titanate etc. Perpetrators now use a sophisticated and economical liquid precursor substance such as PEDOT to implant micro-technology on the facial nervous system of a Targeted Individual. See The Truth Will Set You Free for the merit of using PEDOT in V2k operations.

Targeted Individuals must secondly note with utmost concern that the micro-technology is implanted remotely. The method of implantation is called Remote Plasma-Enhanced Chemical Vapor Deposition (R-PECVD), a process of nanotechnology in which an invisible cloud (called an afterglow) of molecular matter is transported to the Targeted Individual on a carrier gas, where the molecules settle on the nerves and self-assemble into solid shapes, in an implantation event.

The solid implanted shapes are called “polymers”. These implanted polymers also go by another name in the laboratory, “coupling coefficient”. It should be thirdly noted by Targeted Individuals that the term coupling coefficient can be shortened for scientific purposes to the letter “k”.

The “k” in V2k is thus an implant, forged remotely of nanotechnology-type material, on the dormant facial hearing system including the VII nerve (expressed as V2), thereby forming the formidable combination of V2 and k.

It is impossible to explore the meaning of the term “V2k” without discussing the matter from an ethics viewpoint. Implanting nanotechnology in human beings without their consent is probably the greatest human rights violation known to man.

The disclosure of the V2k invention thus brings to light not one but two staggering human rights abuses all at once. The first is the exploitation of a secret hearing system that every human being possesses biologically, man, woman and child. The second is not only the implantation of nanotechnology in human beings, but the method of implantation.

Remote Plasma-Enhanced Chemical Vapor Deposition (R-PECVD) is an undetectable and unethical technology. It - the so-called afterglow or cloud of particulate or molecular matter - is invisible to the naked eye. As it cannot be seen, it cannot be prevented from performing a phase-transition deposition on the facial nervous system of the victim. Once directed to do so remotely by the perpetrators, the particles automatically assemble into solid-state material on the nerves.

It is a chilling fact that the secretive facial nervous system and the equally secretive method of remote implantation (R-PECVD) have gone undetected in the community for decades. It is furthermore a gruelling reality for hundreds of thousands of Targeted Individuals worldwide who have been unethically implanted in this manner and then shunned by the greater community as tin-foil hatters and worse.

Feedback in Biological and Social Systems

According to investigator Terry L Milner, while the forest barn in Camden was busy being outfitted into a laboratory in 1948, sometimes by members of the community who were inspired to lend a hand, Puharich from time to time made his way to New York City.

There, he was seen in the company of the third and final professional associate responsible for the early developmental stages of V2k. His name was Warren S

McCulloch, a former lecturer at North-Western University, whom Puharich already knew from being a philosophy and medical student there.

Milner describes Warren S McCulloch as “a nasty piece of work psychiatrist” and “a real intellectual ugly”. Let’s look at what Milner had to say about him and why:

McCulloch, by then, had chaired a number of conferences on Circular Causal and Feedback Mechanisms in Biological and Social systems sponsored by the Josiah Macy, Jr. Foundation.

There are four distinct and alarming truths that should be noted with utmost urgency by Targeted Individuals about the presence of Warren S McCulloch in the invention phases of V2k.

The first shocking and profane truth is that Warren S McCulloch was a founding member and father of the Cybernetics movement. Cybernetics is described in the dictionary as “the science of communications and automatic control systems in both machines and living things.”

Essentially the core concept of Cybernetics is to unite man and machine as one, as a means of exercising control over the cybernetic entity. Targeted Individuals must note this fact with particular clarity; that man as machine can be subject to automatic control systems. The concept is born of an evil philosophy and is unethical both conceptually and in practice.

The second, irritating truth is that Warren S McCulloch was a psychiatrist by profession. Psychiatry has a pivotally detrimental effect on Targeted Individuals in that psychiatric intervention is provided when people claim to hear voices in their heads.

A psychiatric diagnosis of schizophrenia makes no distinction between organic schizophrenia and the inorganic or artificial hearing of voices described by investigator Terry L Milner in Ratting out Puharich and called voice-to-skull by Targeted Individuals.

The acrimonious war between Targeted Individuals and the psychiatric profession was invariably started by McCulloch. As the father of Cybernetics, he was aware of how the V2k invention caused voice-to-skull, because he helped to invent it. But in his official capacity of psychiatrist, he would diagnose all voice-hearing individuals as schizophrenics by the book, thereby defeating the ends of justice.

In the third shocking truth, Warren S McCulloch added the defining dimension to V2k: the actual content of the V2k voice phenomenon. Certainly Targeted Individuals would be vitally interested to know where the voice-to-skull voices come from.

We’ll start with the conferences chaired by McCulloch under the auspices of the Josiah Macy Jr. Foundation. The topic of discussion was particularly repugnant from a human rights perspective. Those at the conference were discussing Circular Causal and Feedback Mechanisms in Biological and Social Systems.

According to the internet, circular causality is a series of events where each event is caused by the one before it, and the first one is caused by the last. In circular causality, the end causes the beginning, and the beginning causes the end, in perpetuity or an infinity loop.

The infinity loop would furthermore be used to facilitate the presence of feedback, streaming constantly on the mechanism. However, the catalyst for the infinity loop in this instance, would be a biological cybernetic entity, outfitted with the piezoelectric sound-converting solid-state material or “k” supplied with the input of Dr Raymond C Tibbets and Henry K Puharich.

The cause of the feedback would essentially be the cybernetic entity itself, whilst talking, thinking and moving. The feedback would be radiological in nature, meaning that the face radio created of the combination of the dormant facial hearing system and solid-state material would be energized by an external radio frequency.

The words, thoughts and actions would then be played back to the cybernetic entity via the feedback infinity loop mechanism, in a self-perpetuating scenario that is both caused by the cybernetic entity and then re-interpreted by the facial nervous system on receipt of the feedback, as voices, or in certain instances, as body-control.

But McCulloch and the other conference delegates spoke not only of circular causality and feedback mechanisms in biological systems in a singular mind- and body-control application, but also of social systems, in the plural.

What this means is that the biological cybernetic entity would not only be subjected to feedback in isolation, but would be actively used as a causal catalyst to disseminate radiological feedback in social systems, or at community level.

Feedback in social systems echoes the sentiment of author JB Rhine and the belief of disciples such as Joyce Balokovic in the existence of telepathy, along with Puharich’s Dynamics Theory part two, in which it is theoretically possible to transfer thoughts from one biological entity to another.

However, it is clear from the fact that the Cybernetics conferences took place that thought transference could not be significantly achieved by using a pure biological entity, but rather a cybernetic entity that is outwardly human in appearance but contains a cybernetic fingerprint. Thought transference aided by cybernetic means is today called “psychotronics”, a term that is well-known to Targeted Individuals.

The question that remains to be answered is why? Why did McCulloch and other Cybernetics experts strive to create a causal feedback-enabled cybernetic entity? Why did they seek to use the cybernetic entity to furthermore cause psychotronic thought transference in the community? Investigator Terry L Milner looked into McCulloch’s professional associations and noted:

[The Josiah Macy Jr.] Foundation is internationally notorious for funding directly or acting as a conduit for US and British funding of discreditable mind control experiments.

Here, Terry L Milner makes a direct connection between Warren S McCulloch, Henry K Puharich and discreditable 1940s mind-control. The establishment of V2k in the late 1940s, possibly 1948, is an immutable fact that should be recognized as such with a sense of immediacy by Targeted Individuals.

And it is impossible not to talk about the community when discussing the issue of mind-control. It is an understatement to say that ordinary citizens distance themselves from talk of mind-control. The topic is considered taboo and off-limits.

The topic is a non-starter partially because the community naively believes in the sanctity of the mind, and partially because they do not know how practical mind-control could be achieved. Leastways, they've been told by the authorities in whom they trust that mind-control does not exist.

But in reality V2k mind-control is not in the order of hokum and hoodoo, but an achievement based on solid scientific discoveries and the abject contempt for human sanctity.

Terry L Milner took note of Warren S McCulloch's insufferable arrogance in Ratting out Puharich, when he quoted McCulloch as saying:

So much for implanted electrodes; they are here to stay. Through them we will record activities in structures heretofore inaccessible, locating the womb of Fancy. Through them we will stimulate, begetting Fancy...

McCulloch was expounding as early as 1948, that "k", or what he called "implanted electrodes" on Puharich's facial hearing system discovery, would be implanted in the population from that time, forward.

He, McCulloch, stated that, through implanted electrodes, they ("we" - possibly a reference to himself and Puharich together, or the lingering presence of military intelligence) would "record activities" in "structures heretofore inaccessible".

In the oblique language of mind-control practitioners, McCulloch was referring to the recording of mind activity in the brain within the skull, which had, until the invention of V2k in 1948, not been possible. He was saying that the human mind within the skull "structure" had been inaccessible to science.

But by creating the V2k feedback mechanism in biological systems "they" had figured out the way to record the electrical proceeds from the facial nervous system and replay it as feedback to the victim in infinity. In so doing, McCulloch and Puharich and by inference, intelligence, had "located the womb of Fancy".

One of the meanings of the word "fancy" in contemporary dictionaries is "imagine; conceive of; see in one's mind", thus the "womb of Fancy" is the mind, the place where the imagination is born. And with the use of implanted electrodes, Puharich and McCulloch could not only record activities originating in the mind but also play an integral part in unnaturally stimulating (begetting) the imagination, using radiological signal feedback.

It should also be noted that the word "fancy" has fallen largely out of favor in mainstream English usage today, although it was popular during Victorian times and the early 20th century. The word "fancy" in its archaic form was used, inter alia, in psychiatry to describe the mental status of patients in lunatic asylums. It is thus not out of character for McCulloch the psychiatrist to have used the word in his utterances.

In fact, in the purest contextual sense of the word, McCulloch meant that the implanted electrodes would beget madness. And then, in accordance with his duality as both psychiatrist and cyberneticist, the madness delivered by the implanted electrodes would be dealt with (or unofficially not dealt with) on a corrective psychiatric level, but never on the necessary cybernetics level.

The Famous Tooth Radio Story

Investigator Terry L Milner relates the lamentable story of two psychiatric patients at Bellevue mental healthcare facility in New York on whom Puharich and McCulloch conducted V2k experimentation. Some versions of the story place the events that follow in 1953 but Milner stated that Puharich himself wrote that it happened in 1948.

You can read the full account in Ratting out Puharich, but Milner's story goes that there was a man at Bellevue who professed to be hearing voices. Puharich and McCulloch claimed the man was from a coal-mining district, where his job was to grind metal castings against a carborundum wheel.

If you'll recall, carborundum is one of the piezoelectric substances that Puharich experimented with in Camden, and now, mention of carborundum follows Puharich to New York City, also.

And so, the carborundum dust generated during the grinding process somehow coated the metal fillings in the man's teeth and settled between his teeth, reportedly turning his teeth into a radio receiver. Furthermore, the radio that he heard was station WOR in New York to which he was "tuned very precisely", according to Terry L Milner.

I might add that, where Milner used the phrase "tuned very precisely", Puharich, in his patents, always used the term "tuned sharply" when referring to the presence of radio frequencies.

In addition there was not one, but two, psychiatric patients at Bellevue, hearing voices. Both appeared, according to this V2k story, to be not naturally and organically schizophrenic, but tuned, by the personal admission of Puharich and McCulloch, to a radio station, through radio receivers in their teeth.

Then the two doctors, Puharich and McCulloch, "cleaned" the patients' teeth and placed them in a Faraday Cage, designed to screen out ambient radio frequencies, at which time the radio voices stopped.

In her biography, Memories of a Maverick, Bep Hermans gives the following explanation of a Faraday Cage:

When such a room is grounded to earth, and with the door closed, no electromagnetic waves can penetrate. If, for instance a radio is taken inside, it will continue to play as long as the door is open. But, as soon as the door is closed, and providing there is no electric wire passing through the walls, the radio will be completely cut off from the broadcasting station. The radio waves are blocked and cannot penetrate the interior. Such a room is called a Faraday Cage, after the inventor Michael Faraday (1791-1867), a British chemist and physicist.

But investigator Terry L Milner was understandably unhappy about the preceding events and had some questions. He wanted to know a number of pertinent things, starting with how the patients ended up at Bellevue and why the patients, if genuinely, though accidentally listening to WOR New York radio station, were admitted in a psychiatric ward. Lastly he wanted to know, and justly so, what a Faraday Cage was doing in a psychiatric ward.

I would furthermore add, with reference to the patent series and the “tooth” fraud committed by Puharich, that if the tooth story were true, an offending tooth or plurality of affected teeth could just as easily be physically removed by a dentist, so that men such as the ones at Bellevue could go home to their families, with no question of being psychiatrically ill.

Yet, these men were considered mentally ill and incarcerated in a psychiatric ward, and worse, found themselves at the mercy of the father (Puharich) and the godfather (McCulloch) of feedback-based electronic mind-control.

The location of the experimentation shows just how important it was for Puharich and McCulloch to confuse and ultimately associate psychiatric illness with V2k and to make V2k indistinguishable from psychiatric illness. To this very day, it is standard practice of the psychiatric medical community to diagnose a V2k victim as having schizophrenic-related mental illness.

And what the two patients were hearing at Bellevue was not the sweet sounds of WOR New York, which I’m sure was a regular radio station featuring a selection of uplifting content such as music, weather, news, sport and the sunny and chatty commentary of popular disc jockeys, but instead a dour, generic, austere and mind-addling form of radio that amounts to nothing but endless feedback, discussed at the Cybernetics conferences on circular causality and feedback in biological systems.

It is obvious, at least to me, that Puharich, graduated neurologist, set up the V2k on the two people using remotely-implanted solid-state material derived from carborundum, and then McCulloch, the nasty psychiatrist, organized Bellevue as the best-possible venue to come into contact with the V2k subjects in order to do circular causal feedback experimentation on them.

The psychiatric setting would have ensured the minimum of legitimate scrutiny and no supervision whatsoever, because both Puharich and McCulloch were specialists and considered “authorities” on psychiatric matters. Two doctors in white coats, a neurologist and a psychiatrist, roaming the corridors of Bellevue would hardly have raised a stir in the psychiatric ward.

Puharich and McCulloch denied that they were actively conducting V2k experimentation on the two patients at Bellevue, but investigator Terry L Milner, author of Ratting out Puharich, not about to be appeased by such denials, stated:

“It certainly would never occur to me that they were putting voices into heads rather than getting them out.”

The Face of Cybernetics

Warren S McCulloch (his middle name was Sturgis) was one of the founding members of The American Society for Cybernetics and a leading pioneer of Artificial Intelligence (AI).

He was, and still is, known as a powerful intellectual and formidable philosopher. During his lifetime, he spoke extensively at Cybernetics conferences and wrote or contributed towards a large body of papers with joyless titles such as Why the Mind is in the Head, The Modern Concept of Schizophrenia, What the Frog's Eye Tells the Frog's Brain and last but not least, Where is Fancy Bred? that are now preserved in archives and in his book, Embodiments of Mind. He had an abiding interest in “biological computers” and did extensive research for the US military.

Where Terry L Milner described McCulloch as “a real intellectual ugly”, I would go a step further and call him not only intellectually grotesque, but an evil man; an extreme and evil philosopher whose vision has undermined the biological sanctity of the human race.

If V2k victims wonder why the biological harassment they experience is so devastating, look no further than Warren Sturgis McCulloch as a formidable opponent in the V2k nightmare. Looking at pictures of him will reveal that he was what might be described today as “fierce”:

Having experienced McCulloch's fearsome “circular causal feedback mechanism” personally as a Targeted Individual and cybernetic entity, I would like to have assassinated this man for his “womb of Fancy” utterance. I would wish to “beget” his “Fancy” for him through the barrel of a loaded gun, curing all his intellectual ills. But, alas, I would be decades too late. McCulloch died in 1969, four years before I was born; at which time his substantial damage to humanity had already been set in motion.

It astounds me that intellectually capable men such as McCulloch and Puharich could be so childish. Make no mistake; the feedback portion of the V2k experience has within it the seeds of unexpected childishness that all V2k victims must unfortunately face.

For want of a better description, Puharich and McCulloch were organizing a puppet show with themselves as puppet masters and absolutely everyone else as potential, electromagnetically-controlled puppets.

Below you will see another image of Warren S McCulloch, laughing at humanity (LOL) and seemingly in a jovial spirit. But what do we see in the bottom, left-hand corner? Looks like a wine glass to me. I deeply suspect that McCulloch begot his own Fancy with a bottle of wine; that he exercised his intellect and created the feedback mechanism while under the influence of alcohol at times, selling out the future of humanity and cybernetic Targeted Individuals, while essentially being inebriated.

In his fourth patent 3267931, titled Electrically Stimulated Hearing with Signal Feedback, filed in 1963, Henry K Puharich describes the use of a tape recorder during V2k operations. As such, I wish to discuss the “first combination radio and record player” invented by Dr Raymond C Tibbets.

Of vital importance is to understand that the “combination radio and record player” serves a dual purpose, the first of which is to actually play radio, the second is to record. The perpetrators do both. They “play” the radio (the Targeted Individual) and record the return signal (feedback). What it actually comes down to, is that the perpetrators use the feedback to harass the victim.

In simple terms, it means that the perpetrators route the feedback recorded from the victim, to the victim, so that the Targeted Individual is essentially harassing himself. Then, according to the automatic nature of the invention, the perpetrators simply sit back and deride the victim, while applying feedback on autopilot.

Sound recording and delivery equipment is a major cornerstone of V2k. We've already identified the first and second cornerstones, namely the dormant facial hearing system, including VII (V2) nerve, and the piezoelectric material, "k" applied to them, but the use of the radio/recorder combination is also instrumental to V2k, as it begins to identify the feedback equipment that perpetrators have on their premises; perpetrator central.

And if we fast-forward (and excuse another pun) to the 21st century, it is clear that the perpetrators use a robust, more industrial form of sound recording and delivery, called Mag-tape (magnetic tape). This tape is more commonly used in banks and large organizations to pay employees (payroll). But the perpetrators use it to deliver a more sinister payload than a salary.

The Round Table Foundation: Intermediate Years

Somewhere between June and November of 1949, Puharich built another Faraday Cage, this time in the Balokovic's cottage in Camden; ostensibly to shield his delicate electromagnetic equipment from unwanted radio frequencies in the vicinity. He would put the equipment in the cage and shut the door, thereby shutting out any rogue frequencies that might run electromagnetic interference.

The word "shielding" is a familiar word to Targeted Individuals that's bandied about so loosely in this 21st century day and age. Everyone looks to shield themselves, using one or another methodology, against incoming Electronic Harassment.

In reviewing The 7 Keys to V2k and The Truth Will Set You Free, Eleanor White, who needs no introduction to the Targeted Individual community, discredited the use of a Faraday Cage to shield a Targeted Individual from radio frequencies. But what we're seeing here is that Puharich tested and used, in an ongoing manner, a Faraday Cage.

Perhaps Puharich was testing the Faraday Cage as a potential shielding mechanism during his invention of V2k. Puharich himself was likely to conduct a study associated with how someone could possibly outwit the invention using a Faraday Cage.

In fact, Puharich was hyper-aware, moreover paranoid, that due to the invention's strengths, namely the now-documented stealth factor of the invention, that any possible weaknesses, such as not only possible detection but the use of a Faraday Cage as potential shielding, would need to be rigorously investigated throughout the invention phase, as a risk factor.

I would like to look into the use of a Faraday Cage on people and objects. To me, a Faraday Cage is something that is used, more especially, on human subjects, and not objects, as Puharich would have us believe in the at-large rhetoric. Every instance where I have read about the deployment of a Faraday Cage has been in association with a human, and not an object.

With this in mind, Bep Hermans, Puharich's second wife, goes on to say in her biography, Memories of a Maverick, that Puharich met Eileen Garrett, the first psychic in a never-ending parade of psychics who revolved around Puharich, in November 1949 and that she was an adept spiritual medium.

Mrs Garrett was not only the founder of the Parapsychological Foundation of New York but a talented medium with a spiritual controller (what we nowadays call a “familiar” or “spirit guide”) called Uvani.

Puharich asked Mrs Garrett if she would be willing to test her psychic abilities in a Faraday Cage and she gave her consent. However it should be said that there would be no point in Mrs Garrett climbing inside a Faraday Cage, boots and all, if she did not express the same radiological qualities as a V2k victim, or the two “carborundum dust” victims at Bellevue psychiatric facility who had tooth radio and were forced inside a Faraday Cage by Puharich and McCulloch.

First Mrs Garrett wanted Puharich to meet John Hays Hammond Junior, a friend of hers who was one of the world’s greatest electronics inventors. Puharich went on to meet Hammond in December 1949, after which Hammond became his friend and mentor.

According to the website hammondcastle.org, John Hays Hammond Junior was a prolific inventor who held over 400 patents, an amount second only to Thomas Edison, inventor of the electric light bulb. Presumably many of his inventions were electromagnetic and piezoelectric in nature.

He conducted research under the auspices of the Hammond Research Corporation, also known as the Hammond Radio Research Laboratory, in his home, Hammond Castle, a bizarre, landmark castle-mansion commissioned by him and composited of several architectural styles in Gloucester, Massachusetts.

It should be noted by Targeted Individuals with the contempt that it deserves, that John Hays Hammond Junior’s most important work was “the development of remote control via radio waves”, which, according to the website, earned him the title of "The Father of Remote Control".

And while I am not intrinsically opposed to the use of automotive, remote-control technology for motorized gates, televisions and vehicles, etc, it should be sharply noted that remote-control in objects is achieved with the use of piezoelectricity and that the implants proposed by Puharich on the facial nervous system were piezoelectric in nature.

Targeted Individuals should thus realize that piezoelectric material is used not only in a sound-converting application, as per Dr Raymond C Tibbets, but also in a remote-control application, according to John Hays Hammond Junior, Puharich’s mentor.

In fact, it would be safe to say that Puharich learnt a lot from his new friend and mentor. In the literature, Hammond is described as wealthy, eccentric and sly. During his lifetime, he would use his remote-control invention to prank people who visited Hammond Castle, trapping them in rooms with aesthetically hidden doors then opening the doors remotely after they started to panic.

This sly pranksterism was more than just a practical joke. While undoubtedly childish and a form of gaslighting, it had within it the need to gain control over the persons being pranked; to get the better of them, remotely. This unfunny, sinister mindset has been adopted in the V2k invention, accounting for its childish, prankish outcomes and ability to drive victims into an undignified tailspin.

Today, Hammond Castle in Massachusetts is a museum, where visitors pay to tour its rooms and grounds, and view the many artefacts and relics collected by Hammond, along with some of his inventions. The castle is said to be considerably haunted and thus also attracts paranormal investigators and amateur ghost hunters.

Hammond and his wife were reportedly interested in the paranormal, something common to the wealthy elite of the time. However it should be noted by Targeted Individuals, and indeed ghost hunters, that much of the paranormal activity at the castle can be traced back to Hammond's experimentation with electromagnetism and piezoelectricity.

It was around the same time that Puharich lost the use of the neighbor's forest barn laboratory and about a year later, at the end of 1950 that he left Camden and migrated to a nearby hamlet, Glen Cove, moving into a large estate called Warrenton bought with the assistance of one of his wealthy patrons.

According to Bep Hermans, Puharich moved there with 12 assistants, seemingly quadruple the amount of assistants (three) that had worked for him initially at the forest barn in Camden.

In her biography, Memories of a Maverick, Bep Hermans republished an article about Puharich's research that was written around 1950. In that year, a correspondent from the New York Times, Arthur Krock, wrote, in his regular column "In the Nation", an article titled One Phase of the Unending Quest:

On the estate known as Warrenton in Glen Cove, Maine is the laboratory of the Round Table Foundation, of which the director is Dr. Henry K. Puharich and the research is in Electrobiolgy.

In two weeks spent on the grounds of Warrenton, this correspondent became sufficiently familiar with the work of the foundation to realize that Dr. Puharich is one of those pragmatic dreamers who give their lives to wrest from nature secrets which, unfolded one by one, have improved the physical lot and raised the spiritual contribution of man.

One study proceeds from the theory of Dr. Daniel E. Schneider: that a nerve in the ear, known as the chorda tympani, is sonic... [and] adding experimental substance to his [Puharich's] 'Peizo [Piezo]-electric Theory...'

By this time, Puharich had already finished inventing basic V2k. This is evident by the fact that he had moved to a large residential estate and had the assistance of 12 paid laboratory staff members at his disposal.

After seriously putting his back, much of the time alone, into inventing V2k, or, as Terry L Milner described it, his "mental pedal to the mental metal", it was time for Puharich to take a breather; get a load off. It was to be a time of repose and appropriate merriment, in which influential and successful journalists such as Arthur Krock would be invited to visit Warrenton estate to hang out with Puharich and interview him as one of the good old boys, an ex-journalist, in the wake of his important scientific achievement.

Puharich was set to be portrayed as a "pragmatic dreamer" in the media, a conscientious science celebrity who had improved the physical lot of people, and raised the spiritual contribution of man.

But in the foul reality of it, Puharich had found a secretive hearing system that would be exposed to stealthy, remotely-implanted piezoelectric nanotechnology, meaning that the presence of the implants would effectively turn the individual into a cybernetic entity.

The implants would then be subjected to feedback in biological systems, in which military intelligence would have all-access to the cybernetic entity's mind and record not only his thoughts, but play them back to him as voices, directly to the sound centers of his brain, 24/7, producing a synthetic form of madness that is, moreover, a form of torture.

Furthermore, such a cybernetic entity would then go on to be used as a springboard to launch feedback into social systems, or thought transference in the community, spreading from the cybernetic entity to others in a circular trajectory and returning in a variety of unwanted events and impossible synchronicities.

It is a fact that any human being subjected to the V2k invention would know the indescribable opposite of rejoicing. And given the permanent nature of the piezoelectric implants, any expression of human joy would likewise be permanently revoked and replaced by extreme trauma.

This termination of the human rights of the cybernetic entity, or Targeted Individual, should be our number one concern here. It should be noted that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at its third session on 10 December 1948, the same year in which V2k was invented.

Among the 30 articles adopted were freedom from torture and degrading treatment, the right to recognition as a person before the law, freedom from interference with privacy, family, home and correspondence, the right to an adequate living standard and the right to a social order that articulates the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a document.

The V2k invention directly violates these rights, starting with torture and degradation and unethically breaching the privacy of the mind. V2k assures that persons afflicted with the condition are not recognized before the law. Furthermore, feedback in social systems comes into direct and aggravating conflict with the right to social order, because it is essentially an extended mind-control program designed to undermine the constructs and cohesion of the social order.

It remains to be stated that military intelligence unilaterally desecrated universal human rights with the V2k invention. It can furthermore be said that the V2k invention required no discipline to produce. The inventors of V2k were so busy trying to determine whether control of the human mind could be achieved, that they failed to consider if it should, from an ethics viewpoint.

Such a sentiment can also be applied to other dangerous initiatives, such as the development of nuclear capabilities and other staunchly anti-human interventions usually found in the possession of military intelligence and their infantries; sophisticated anti-personnel weaponry and the like.

It was in that pivotal year in history, 1948, that military intelligence failed to take the UN General Assembly's adoption of the 30 human rights articles into consideration. Had they taken the articles into account, we would not be here today, as Targeted Individuals.

Instead, military intelligence overstepped the human rights boundary line on several counts in order to control the human mind. Once the UN had adopted the 30 human rights articles, military intelligence, under the auspices of the US government, should have abandoned mind-control as an unacceptably gross and flagrant human rights violation.

But military intelligence had no reasonable expectation of abandoning V2k mind-control, a burgeoning invention, but were about to ratify it as fit for the community, as we will learn in the next chapter.

1952: The Birth of Electromagnetic Mind-Control

In the interim, Puharich, never one to be idle and who had received a $100 000 research grant to do so-called psychic research on Mrs Eileen Garret, conducted a successful, three-month experimentation with her and a Faraday Cage.

Whereas the experiment was said to be of a “psychic” nature, we know from the previous chapter that The Round Table Foundation, although touted as a private paranormal research center, was simply a front for intelligence activities and moreover the development of V2k.

By the same deductive reasoning, Mrs Garrett, who was a natural and supposedly gifted psychic and medium, was also a V2k victim, although not an outright voice-to-skull victim such as the ones at Bellevue. As somewhat of a volunteer, she was subjected to a milder form of V2k by Puharich that closely mimics a psychic outcome, rather than a clairaudient or voice-hearing outcome.

It can be said that Puharich needed to maintain a veneer of respectability and civility in his operations conducted under the auspices of being a civilian. Throughout his working life, he was very careful to associate almost exclusively with psychics, mediums, clairvoyants and the like, behind whom he could hide the presence of the V2k invention.

But the same cannot be said for Puharich in a military capacity. In terms of the military industrial complex, Puharich was a tough, experienced and ruthless team-player and team leader when called upon to lead.

And so it came to pass that in 1952, the experimentation with Eileen Garrett attracted, according to Bep Hermans’ biography, Memories of a Maverick, the attention of the US and French military, who sent high-ranking emissaries, a colonel and a general respectively and no less, to Warrenton, wanting to know what the excitement expressed by Puharich was all about.

And on account of the meeting between Puharich, Colonel Jack Stanley and General J C Sauzey in August 1952, Puharich was ordered to present his “new data” (own research and research collaborations with Drs Rosen, McCulloch and Tibbets, etc) “on telepathy” to none other than the Chief of Psychological Warfare of the US military.

Targeted Individuals are to note this fact with the respect and sobriety that it deserves: that Puharich was about to submit the V2k invention, as described in the previous chapter, to the Chief of Psychological Warfare, to be used as a possible psychological warfare invention!

The meeting took place at the Pentagon in Washington DC on the 24th of November, 1952. At the meeting, Puharich presented a paper called An Evaluation of the Possible Usefulness of Extrasensory Perception in Psychological Warfare.

But the worst was yet to come. What follows is an exposition of the documented future of not only V2k, but electronic mind-control in general that makes essential reading for Targeted Individuals in their quest to understand the topic of Electronic Harassment and V2k mind-control, both past and present.

Targeted Individuals should take heed of the fact that a list of major electromagnetic mind-control projects is in existence. The list has been published over and over on the internet by concerned citizens in the interest of exposing US government human rights abuses that have swept the world for decades.

These concerned citizens are not generally Targeted Individuals; they are concerned with issues broader than just that of the V2k that concerns us here.

As we can see from the above list, there are no less than 10 electromagnetic mind-control programs that have been developed by the US government over the years. Many of them were notarized under the auspices of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), some under the United States Air Force (USAF), the National Security Agency (NSA) and the Office of Naval Research (ONR).

Given the reality of mind-control at community level, it disturbs me to have to ask why civilized government organizations such as the Air Force and Navy would have a need for mind-control capabilities. But that is not the reason for publishing the electromagnetic mind-control list. Primarily, it is to identify the electromagnetic mind-control program associated to V2k.

Those who have read the list carefully will identify Project Moonstruck, the major electromagnetic mind-control program of 1952, as the V2k invention of Dr Henry K Puharich. Let's take another crucial look at the entry, to satisfy ourselves that Puharich's invention and Project Moonstruck are one and the same:

Project Moonstruck, 1952, CIA:

Electronic implants in brain and teeth

Targeting: Long range

Implanted during surgery or surreptitiously during abduction

Frequency range: HF - ELF transceiver implants

Purpose: Tracking, mind and behavior control, conditioning, programming, covert operations

Functional Basis: Electronic Stimulation of the Brain, E.S.B.

To be honest it is devastating to realize, with dawning comprehension and a crushed spirit, that the V2k and Electronic Harassment experienced by so many Targeted Individuals today is actually Project Moonstruck, a bona fide mind-control program of the mighty US government.

But devastation aside, there are several important things that need to be noted about Project Moonstruck and the circumstances surrounding its entry as a major electromagnetic mind-control program.

The first is the written confirmation, in the entry itself, of the involvement of Puharich's tooth fraud, which we already know is code for the dormant facial hearing system, inclusive of the dental nervous system. The second is the use of the word "implants" in the entry, which we know in the vernacular as "k", in Puharich's patents as solid-state, and in modern V2k operations as R-PECVD.

The third thing that needs to be taken into account is the name of the program: Project Moonstruck. The actual name is significant and dare I say, familiar.

So let's take a look at the word "moonstruck". For this, we go to thefreedictionary.com to discover the definition:

moon·struck
(mo(on'strūk') also moon·strick·en (-strīk'ən)
adj.

1. Dazed or distracted with romantic sentiment.
2. Mentally deranged; crazy.

As you can see, this word has two meanings. The first meaning is basically "love struck" which does not concern us here, save to say that perpetrators are in love with the V2k mind-control invention for the obvious reason of enjoying godlike control and empowerment over a victim. But it is the second definition that is pertinent to Targeted Individuals.

Moonstruck describes a person who is mentally deranged or crazy; it refers to the manner in which Targeted Individuals under the influence of V2k mind-control are portrayed or perceived: as crazy and deranged.

The original creators and inventors who named the program "Project Moonstruck" knew this fact; the CIA, keeper of the entry, knew this, just like the perpetrators know it right now. The naming convention of Project Moonstruck thus has to do with the sentiment of the intelligence entities surrounding the central invention.

I refer specifically to the utterances made by Warren S McCulloch, in which his resident intelligence agency, military intelligence, would use implanted electrodes to "beget Fancy". We know from the previous chapter that the term "fancy" was used in 1940s psychiatry to express the concept of madness.

It is disgusting in the extreme that the US government would proactively produce a form of synthetic institutionalized madness, give it a suitable name, and then relegate afflicted individuals as psychiatric basket cases with no further recourse; refugees of a psychiatric garbage dumpster.

And yet, that is not all that there is to be said about this nasty invention. It is to be noted that Project Moonstruck was founded in 1952, the same year in which Henry K Puharich handed over the V2k invention to the Chief of Psychological Warfare, of the Pentagon.

In the handing-over from Puharich to the US government, the V2k invention would become the first of the major electromagnetic mind-control programs; a psychological warfare invention of an institutionalized type with unimaginable consequences for the individual under targeting.

Now, if I am not mistaken, Targeted Individuals know, appreciate, inculcate and understand the term “psychological warfare” in their day-to-day living arrangements, after it came to be that psychological warfare suddenly and unexpectedly showed up at their house one day to visit, and then failed to leave.

Furthermore, the invention visited them in a civilian setting, in a so-called time of peace. To be clear, Targeted Individuals experience the obstructive presence of psychological warfare in peace time in a civilian setting, which is even more extreme, disturbing or destructive than psychological warfare during recognized war times.

The reason for this is that when everyone is experiencing a war, everyone understands; but when one person, alone, is experiencing wartime during peace, no one understands, effectively isolating or denying the target who is constantly “at war” with an unseen V2k force that specializes in hyper-effective, ruthless, psychological warfare of a military grade.

The Round Table Foundation: The Council of Nine

Our story continues with a party, a social, organized by Henry K Puharich’s old friend and psychic medium, Eileen Garrett. Mrs Garrett threw the party so that Puharich, ever the central figure in our hair-raising story, could meet one of her patrons.

It was at this party, hosted on the 3rd of December, 1951, that Puharich first met Dr D G Vinod, a Hindu scholar. Unfortunately for Vinod, he and Puharich got around to chatting, at which time Puharich learnt that Vinod was a professor of philosophy and psychology at the University of Poona, India, who was in the United States lecturing on behalf of the Rotary Club International.

We know already that Puharich made his way from Maine to New York to pursue his dodgy dealings and it was on a train trip to New York on 14 February 1952 that Puharich and Vinod met again “by chance”. They got together two days later at a hotel in New York, where Vinod, a psychic and a medium, read Puharich’s past and future. Puharich was impressed and asked Vinod if he would go to Glen Cove to participate in experimentation.

Having agreed to the experimentation, Vinod went to Maine ten months later, to visit the Round Table Foundation at Puharich’s estate, Warrenton.

On 31 December 1952, Vinod entered the great hall of Warrenton, at which time “a curious thing happened”, according to Bep Hermans’ Memories of a Maverick. Vinod, without removing his overcoat or greeting anyone present, walked directly to the library as though he had been inside the estate before. He took a seat on a sofa and immediately fell into a trance.

Then, at precisely 9pm, he started talking, or what people in the parapsychological community call “channelling”, an important entity by the name of “M”:

"M calling: We are Nine Principles and Forces, personalities if you will, working in complete mutual implication. We are forces, and the nature of our work is to accentuate the positive, the evolutionary, and the teleological aspects of existence. By teleology I do not mean the teleology of human derivation in a multidimensional concept of existence. Teleology will be understood in terms of a different ontology. To be simple, we accentuate certain directions as will fulfil the destiny of creation. We propose to work with you in some essential respects with the relation of contradiction and contrariety. We shall negate and revise part of your work, by which I mean the work as presented by you. The point is that we want to begin altogether at a different dimension, though it is true that your work has itself led up to this. I deeply appreciate your dedicatedness to the great cause of peace, which is fulfilment of finitesimal existence. Peace is not warlessness. Peace is the integral fruitage of personality. We have designed to utilize you and thus to fulfil you. Peace is a process and will be revealed only progressively.

You have it in plenty; I mean the patience that is so deeply needed in this magnificent adventure. But today, at the moment of our advent, the most eventful and spectacular phase of your work begins.

By the time Vinod spoke the above pronouncements, there was no doubt a moderate gathering of people who worked and lived at Warrenton in attendance, including Puharich.

Puharich listened to "M" through Vinod and said: "It is helpful to have your guidance", after which Vinod continued channelling "M" for around 90 minutes to the astonishment, no doubt, of Puharich's audience.

And thus the story of "The Nine" or "The Council of Nine" began.

According to the story obtained from historical research, The Council of Nine is a group of nine "disembodied nonhuman intelligences" acting and speaking in consensus (a quorum) to the human race. They go as far as revealing themselves as nine deities (gods) of Egypt with a vested interest in the future good of humanity.

The Nine were not only a major channelling force to be reckoned with, but were, and still are in certain circles, worshipped as extraterrestrial gods. Their teachings are considered a harbinger of, or an early manifestation of the so-called New Age movement that became popular in the 1960s.

Much has been written about The Nine, their robust debut with Vinod and their absolute influence on already influential people in their own right such as politicians and billionaires within the community. One only needs to Google "The Nine" or "The Council of Nine" to see what all the excitement around these "gods" was and is still about, to this very day.

Basically, the concept of The Nine is based on information or topics that were obtained, by Puharich, from a historical genre called "forbidden history" or "forbidden knowledge"; tracts of history that are said to be contrary to what we have been taught in mainstream history, courtesy of living under an allegedly prevailing worldwide totalitarian system.

It is furthermore to be said that the topic of forbidden history and knowledge, namely the allegation that information of an esoteric nature is being withheld from contemporary humans in a bid to discourage knowledge of an overlord system, has gained traction in the 21st century, through authors such as David Icke and other conspiracy theory-type authors.

However it must be understood with singularity that The Radiohead Protocol does not concern itself with forbidden history; except within the context of Puharich using the mammoth topic of forbidden knowledge to embellish and underpin the proceeds of his V2k invention.

One only needs to read books such as The Stargate Conspiracy of Picknett and Prince, to appreciate the unwieldy scope and scale of the topic. And thus it is to be understood that Puharich stole or annexed portions of forbidden history in a bid to hide his V2k invention in plain sight. Hence, the “hijacking” of the myths and legends of a particular portion of history referred to by Picknett and Prince.

So let’s go back to the actual story expounded by Vinod while in the trance. Consider the way in which the disembodied intelligence, “M”, spoke: the rhetoric is what can only be described as “gobbledygook” and a bunch of nonsense. Phrases such as “teleology will be understood in terms of a different ontology” and “peace is the integral fruitage of personality”, etc, are the product of Vinod’s Fancy, begotten by Puharich in a debut round of V2k mind-control.

The utterances made by Vinod were partially technical, as one would expect from a professor of psychology, and partially scrambled and garbled, which, for the benefit of historical researchers, is a clear indicator of the hidden presence of V2k mind-control.

In this day and age, contemporary editors would describe the transcript of Vinod’s channelling of “M” as “wordy” or containing “wordiness”, which basically means that a lot of words were being used to cover for flimsy or batshit (completely mad or crazy) content that never really comes to the point.

It is clear in retrospect that Vinod’s utterances were bizarre: a mixture of science and insanity that ultimately amounts to garbage talk, which, in Vinod’s case, paraded itself as godhood, some kind of ancient wisdom, or the forbidden history already mentioned.

Puharich, who had arranged Vinod’s V2k debut, was at Warrenton to observe the Hindu professor empirically. So what did Puharich want?

Puharich wanted to see how Vinod behaved in a civilian setting. He wanted to know if the feedback was doing its job effectively, interacting correctly with the “k” on Vinod’s facial nervous system. So, in other words, it wasn’t so much the message that Puharich was interested in, but indeed the delivery of the message by means of V2k; the method of delivery.

And because Vinod was known to be psychic, it would appear as though he was organically channelling this group of entities, The Nine, when, in actual fact, Vinod started to talk at 9pm exactly, having been placed on a timer pre-programmed by Puharich, the man himself.

Note how Puharich said, “It is helpful to have your guidance” to the entity “M”. Note that Puharich was present and officiating, ever making himself available at the very center of the action. To the casual observer, it might look like Vinod was the center of attention, but Puharich, the grand puppet master of minds, was silently commanding the attention from the sideline and revelling, I dare say, in his role of secret mind-controller in the midst of the “excited ensemble”.

According to Bep Hermans’ biography and The Stargate Conspiracy, Puharich and eight attendants “worked” with Vinod for around a month, until the end of January 1953.

Then, on 26 February 1953, an event of great significance to Targeted Individuals, occurred.

Puharich, the civilian, was recalled to the ranks of the military. He was sworn in as a Captain of the Medical Corps at the Army Chemical Center in Edgewood, Maryland, headquarters for the research into chemical, radiological and bacteriological warfare of the US military. According to The Stargate Conspiracy, the order for Puharich’s redrafting into the military came the day after he briefed the Pentagon on the 24th of November, 1952.

The re-appointment clearly ratified Puharich’s position within military intelligence. He had attained the rank of Captain and was deployed to a warfare division of the military. We know already that Puharich was familiar with the non-commercial aspects of radio usage, shown to him by Dr Tibbets.

Indeed we also know that he was adept at chemistry, having practiced an early form of Chemical Vapor Deposition (CVD) on the two V2k victims at Bellevue, Eileen Garrett and Dr Vinod, although this is not at all evident in the popular narrative.

To the likes of an innocent like Bep Hermans, Puharich’s second wife, Puharich’s move to the Army Chemical Center was an important and logical step in his career trajectory, even though she knew that he had already avoided compulsory military service years before by obtaining a medical discharge due to his “middle ear infection”.

It stands to reason that Puharich, a radiological and chemical expert, was at the Army Chemical Center for a specific reason; called up as a Captain, but technically known as the Chief of the Outpatient Department of the Post Dispensary.

Plainly speaking, I could not imagine Puharich having much to do with pedestrian matters such as military outpatients and prescriptions in a medical dispensary; after all, he was a ruthless, pioneering mind-controller. So let’s look at three scenarios in order determine what Puharich was doing at Edgewood and the cover stories told to conceal his real purpose at the Army base.

In the first scenario, Puharich was a run-of-the-mill Army doctor, who treated people such as the wives of military servicemen, etc, much as a General Practitioner (GP) would do. Indeed he described himself as being an Army GP in his book, The Sacred Mushroom.

It is worth noting here that Picknett and Prince of The Stargate Conspiracy reject the notion that Puharich was a military medical GP at Edgewood, as do I.

In the second scenario, it is now known, after the Freedom of Information Act came into effect, that there was classified human experimentation going on at Edgewood between 1948 and 1975, inclusive of the time of Puharich's military redrafting in 1953. According to the Wikipedia entry online, the Edgewood Arsenal Human Experiments was similar to (but not to be confused with) MKULTRA.

But it is my major suspicion, as an investigator, in the third and final theoretical scenario that Puharich, in accordance with the Pentagon's redrafting of him into the military after he briefed the Chief of Psychological Warfare, was, in all probability, at Edgewood to perfect or tweak the intellectually ugly V2k invention into a psychological warfare invention.

Thus you can see that there have been two robust layers of cover provided to Puharich's presence at Edgewood; firstly, that he was a military base doctor of no significant consequence; the second being that he was working on the Edgewood Arsenal Human Experiments, a now-forgiven project that has long since been declassified and openly discussed in US Congress in the interest of brokering greater transparency between the alphabet agencies and the community.

Two things come to mind regarding Edgewood. The first is that Congress has never debated V2k. In terms of discussing the Edgewood Arsenal Human Experiments but not the psychological warfare version of V2k produced there called Project Moonstruck, Congress has essentially debated the peas, but not the steak.

The second thing about Edgewood is that it was also the center for bacteriological warfare. Some Targeted Individuals have speculated on the internet that there is a viral or bacteriological aspect to V2k or Electronic Harassment, and this could very well be true, given that Edgewood also had a bacteriological focus or interest.

It was during this tour of duty that Puharich returned to his estate, Warrenton and The Round Table Foundation for a "momentous occasion".

The occasion, about to be revealed in all its fanfare, was the final "sitting" of Dr Vinod channelling "M", the disembodied intelligence representing The Nine, a regal occasion that demanded a great deal of ceremony.

So it came to pass on the 27th of June 1953 that the members of the Round Table Foundation, a circle of nine people led by Puharich, gathered to listen to Vinod channelling "M" of The Nine for the last time (or what other books on the matter describe as a séance).

Two of the nine people present were a philosopher and inventor, Arthur M Young and his wife, Ruth. Another member (sitter) present was Alice Bouverie, daughter of the powerful and wealthy Astor family and descendent of John Jacob Astor (a family known as one of the 13 bloodline families of the Illuminati), along with Marcella Du Pont of the Du Ponts, another wealthy family of Illuminati "bloodline", prompting Picknett and Prince to write that the excitement surrounding The Nine was "percolating through to the upper echelons of American society".

It was at this final sitting that The Nine, through Dr Vinod, said, "God is nobody else than we together, the Nine Principles of God. There is no God other than what we are together".

In response to The Nine, Puharich is recorded as having said, according to The Stargate Conspiracy, that The Nine are “directly related to Man’s concept of God” and “the controllers of the Universe operate under the direction of The Nine”.

But I would like to take a look at what Puharich was actually saying with these two statements. The first statement, that The Nine are directly related to Man’s concept of God, is a reference to the manner in which the V2k invention works. Picknett and Prince, who described Puharich as having a “disturbing talent for creating belief systems”, would be absolutely correct in saying so.

The “k” that oppresses the facial nervous system of the V2k victim impairs not only reason and logic, but belief structures of the primitive brain. The encased nerves are then hijacked by the feedback, at once subjugating the victim’s belief system and imposing a new one, in the very act of mind-control. So, actually, Puharich both tore down (deconstructed) belief systems and created (constructed) alternate belief systems using V2k.

The second statement, namely that “the controllers of the Universe operate under the direction of The Nine”, is mind-control double-talk uttered by Puharich, that, when interpreted as such, should simply read:

“The Nine operate under the direction of the mind-controllers of the Universe.”

Dr Vinod soon left the United States, packing his bags for good and possibly realizing that something was amiss at the Round Table Foundation and with Puharich, predatory host of Warrenton, and went back to India, never to be seen again.

His career, or at least any prospect of career advancement within the United States, was to be over, a fact that should be noted by current Targeted Individuals, all of whom struggle with a lack of advancement, on a great many levels.

But that was not the end of the story. The Nine were to re-emerge many years later in other channellings, as I will discuss later.

When Prophecy Fails: Dorothy Martin and Dr Charles Laughead

The story that follows was reported in the press in December 1954, approximately a year and a half after Vinod’s departure. It also subsequently became the topic of a book released in 1956, titled When Prophecy Fails, a voluminous tome by Leon Festinger, Henry W Riecken and Stanley Schachter.

It concerned a prominent figure and academic by the name of Dr Charles Laughead, a staff physician at Michigan State University in Lansing and a virtual “nobody” from the village of Oak Park, Illinois, homemaker (housewife) Dorothy Martin.

Both of these individuals were interested in UFOs (flying saucers), an emerging public trend at the time, and it was through a mutual acquaintance (an expert on flying saucers) that the Laugheads, Charles Laughead and his wife Lillian first came into contact with Dorothy Martin.

Dorothy Martin was a so-called “contactee”, a person in contact with an extraterrestrial entity or a melee of entities. She received messages through automatic writing and hearing voices, first from her deceased father, then through an entity called “Elder Brother” and finally through a collection of extraterrestrials (the “Guardians”), principle among them being an important entity by the name of Sananda, supported by a number of agents or assistants from fictional planets Clarion and Cerus.

A paper called Prophecy from Planet Clarion written by an anonymous author in the interest of summarizing When Prophecy Fails, says:

Toward mid-April [1954] she [Dorothy Martin] began to receive communications from Sananda, who was destined to become her most important source of information and instruction, as well as her principle link with orthodox Christian revelation, for Sananda subsequently identified himself as the contemporary identity of the historical Jesus - his new name having been adopted with the beginning of the “new cycle” or age of light.

A few days later, Dorothy Martin received another message from one of Sananda’s assistants, telling her to expect more messages and that she must prepare to relay their communications to the people. She mentioned it to a number of acquaintances at the local flying saucer club, at which time she was introduced to Dr Charles Laughead and his wife Lillian.

And so, on the 23rd of July 1954, Dorothy Martin received a message saying that she must go to Lyons field, a local military air base, to witness the landing of Sananda’s flying saucer. So Dorothy Martin, accompanied by Charles and Lillian Laughead and ten or so other people, who didn’t wish to miss out on the spectacle, went to the air base.

Apparently the flying saucer was scheduled to land at noon. So Dorothy Martin, the Laugheads and the followers were there before noon, and because it was approaching lunch time, they even had picnic foods in their cars to eat while they waited for Sananda to arrive.

The group was parked and milling about on the shoulder of a long, straight road, with a view of the airfield, where they could keep an eye on the sky, when, according to When Prophecy Fails, something very strange happened. An unknown man approached the group from out of nowhere:

Although the road was long and straight and the fields bordering it offered neither cover nor concealment, she [Dorothy Martin] had not seen him walking toward them; it was as if he had materialized out of thin air. He crossed the highway toward the group and, as he drew nearer, she sensed something strange, almost eerie in his appearance and manner. She recalls a somewhat strange “look in his eye” and a curiously rigid bearing.

Dorothy Martin went to get fruit juice and a sandwich from her car and offered it to the man, but he declined, prompting Dorothy to say that she couldn’t imagine any one at that time of day on a lonely highway declining a glass of juice.

“I asked him again, but he just said: ‘No thank you.’ I looked at his eyes - eyes that looked through my soul - and the words sent electric currents to my feet.”

Then Dorothy and the group turned their attention to monitoring the sky for Sananda’s saucer. The man stayed around for a bit, looking at the sky and then looking at Dorothy

Martin in particular. Shortly thereafter, he walked away and simply disappeared, something which Dorothy Martin noticed:

I looked back and he was gone - just gone. He was no place to be seen. And I felt, I became - oh, I can't tell you; there's no word for it. I knew something was going on that I didn't understand.

That day, no flying saucer landed. Sananda failed to arrive and some of the followers left the group, disenchanted by his no-show. Dorothy Martin herself conceded that there was something going on that she couldn't understand.

But that was not the end of the Dorothy Martin scene; it was just the beginning. By October of 1954, the housewife and channeller of Sananda's message joined forces with Dr Charles Laughead, who provided publicity and was the spokesman of the group. It was also around that time that Leon Festinger got involved, wanting to test out a new "dissonance" and "disconfirmation" theory he had formulated, on the "cult" surrounding Dorothy Martin.

There were two groups of followers ("Seekers"), one based in Oak Park, Illinois, around Dorothy Martin and one in Lansing, Michigan, around Charles Laughead, where the two groups of followers gathered to hear the teachings of Dorothy Martin.

According to a report published in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette on the 17th of December 1954, Dr Laughead was fired by Michigan State University two days before on the 15th of December 1954 for claiming that there would be "violent upheavals" on planet Earth on the 21st of December (solstice), at which time a cataclysmic event (a surging of water resulting in the possible flooding of the Eastern and Western seabords of the USA) would result not only in the destruction of Chicago, but the rising of the lost continent of Atlantis and it's Pacific Ocean continental counterpart, Mu, or Lemuria.

As I have stated before, Targeted Individuals are not to be impressed with this form of forbidden history. The story of Atlantis, for example, was "hijacked" (Picknett and Prince) by the intelligence community and in my research by Puharich in particular, as a fraudulent foundation on which to base his subsequent V2k activities.

I would furthermore make the unfortunate observation that Dr Charles Laughead was selected for V2k experimentation simply because of his name, Laughead, an indictment on unsuspecting human beings unknowingly subjected to V2k being laughed at by the intelligence community; a joke in certain circles not shared by the victims involved.

Continuing with the story, Dorothy Martin had received a communication from Sananda that she and her select group of people would be picked up by a flying saucer on the 21st of December, just before the advent of the flood waters generated by the raising of Atlantis, etc.

Dr John Hannah, president of Michigan State University, said, that while not interested in Dr Laughead's personal beliefs, the university had objected to Laughead using his influence on students to promote a "peculiar set of beliefs of questionable validity".

In fact, two noteworthy things happened on the 17th of December. Firstly, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported on the dismissal of Laughead, and secondly, and by no means secondarily, sometime before noon on the same day, Dorothy Martin received a phone call from a man who claimed to be “Captain Video” from outer space. He told her that the spaceship that would be coming on the 21st of December would land in her back yard and pick her up at 4pm.

Lillian Laughead was inclined to believe that it was a practical joke, but Dorothy Martin and Charles Laughead were quick to assure her that the messages were real.

By 4pm, Dorothy Martin and around five of her followers, including the Laugheads, waited in Martin’s kitchen in Oak Park. They had removed all metal from their persons, at Sananda’s instruction, such as belt buckles, buttons, metal clasps, bobby pins and zippers.

But 4pm came and went; the space ship never arrived. The back yard remained just that: an empty, suburban back yard, a fact that played right into the hands of the writers of When Prophecy Fails, Festinger et al, especially when anticipated landings repeatedly failed to take place over the next few days after the 21st of December.

Indeed the 21st of December came and went on the global calendar also; the Eastern and Western seaboard did not experience catastrophic Tsunami activity that day leading to the destruction of major US cities and loss of life and Atlantis and Lemuria failed to emerge from their hiding places in the world’s oceans.

Two days later, Charles Laughead’s sister, Margaret, who’d clearly had enough of the aforementioned apocalyptic story that was all over the newspapers, and not to mention the fact that none of it came true, petitioned to have her brother and his wife, Lillian, declared mentally unfit, as reported by the Chicago Daily Tribune on the 23rd of December 1954. And although Charles Laughead was examined by two court-appointed psychiatrists, they found him “entirely normal” and the petition was dismissed.

Dorothy Martin, who narrowly avoided law enforcement intervention, left Oak Park alone and in disguise and went to Arizona, while the Laugheads decided to leave Lansing and move to California, where Charles Laughead was last mentioned as giving lectures to UFO enthusiasts.

It is clear, at least to me, that Dorothy Martin was the first non-psychic to be given V2k treatment. Perhaps Puharich, whose name was never mentioned in connection with the story, although we do find him nosing about the Laugheads later, wanted to see whether Dorothy Martin, an ordinary housewife, could create a V2k spectacle worthy of front page news.

The story is full of V2k markers and red flags, some of which may be known to Targeted Individuals and others not. For example, something that should be an immediate red flag is that Dorothy Martin was hearing voices, a giveaway for V2k activity. The voices had to do with UFOs, something in which Dorothy Martin was actively interested.

Her V2k experience is consistent with having “k” material, including “repeater” material, implanted on her facial nervous system. That is why the same thing happened over and over again: Dorothy Martin would receive a call to action in which she would ready herself for the landing of a spaceship and subsequent evacuation from planet Earth, repeating the ritual time and again, consistent with the implantation of “k” of an electronic repeater variety and the aggressive application of feedback in biological systems.

It's also interesting to note that Puharich, who manifested as Sananda, had an assistant or assistants on "planet Clarion". Indeed, this must have been the only truth spoken during Dorothy Martin's V2k ambit. Puharich, stationed at Edgewood, had been given a suitable assistant or collaborator in the ranks of the military personnel to assist him in populating Dorothy Martin's feedback and/or instructing her via a microphone.

The assistant or collaborator was a man by the name of Dr Joseph "Joe" Lawrence, a dentist and co-author of Puharich's hearing-aid (mind-control) patent series. I will talk about this major villain later.

But first, I would like to talk about two sinister things that happened during the Dorothy Martin incident. The first of these is to discuss the strange man who suddenly appeared at the Lyons airfield during Sananda's failed landing, only to disappear again.

The man is what is called an apport or apparition, known to paranormal investigators as a "ghost". There are a number of clear indicators here of V2k experimentation taking place in the background; the use of paranormal frequencies to assist in the materialization of a human-type entity.

Remember that the major mind-control programs and projects are electromagnetic in nature and that electromagnetism not only facilitates, but serves to amplify, paranormal activity.

Add to this the vast nature of the combined knowledge, inclusive of paranormal principles of forbidden knowledge long held by the military industrial complex, and witness the awesome powers of Puharich and others like him.

The unknown man at Lyons airfield acted in a manner consistent with a paranormal projection. That is to say, that when Dorothy Martin offered him a drink, he (it) declined the goods being offered, because the embodiment of an esoteric apport or apparition entity cannot touch a physical object as it is nothing more than an incorporeal manifestation.

V2k, by its very nature as an electromagnetic intervention, can and does create paranormal manifestations, even though not all Targeted Individuals have seen them, because not all perpetrators use this portion of the V2k functionality to engage a Targeted Individual. Towards the end of my targeting as a V2k victim, I was fortunate enough to witness an apport or apparition in action.

One evening while I was sitting outside on the porch, there was what I can only describe as an amplified silence, or what is called infrasound, at which time a cat suddenly appeared and ran towards me, veering to the left and into a corner of the garden.

But this was no ordinary cat of a cute and cuddly type but had a galloping, yet hyper-silent gait, and an eerie and creepy appearance, consistent with Dorothy Martin's description of the disappearing man.

I urgently called to my son and he came and searched with a good flashlight for the cat in the corner, but there was no cat to be seen! Shortly after he went back in the house, the cat once again reappeared and ran soundlessly in the opposite direction through plants and bushes (impossible), until it simply disappeared in the same manner as the apparition that visited Dorothy Martin.

Let me now discuss the second sinister thing that happened at Dorothy Martin's house. As you may recall from the story, Dorothy Martin received a phone call from a man who claimed to be "Captain Video" from outer space. He made her get ready for the landing of Sananda in a space craft at 4pm on the 21st of December 1954.

What's disturbing about this is two-fold. Firstly, I'd like to take issue with the chilling words, "Captain Video" and what they mean to me. I have researched the invention of video and the search result says:

In 1951 the first video tape recorder captured live images from television cameras by converting the camera's electrical impulses and saving the information onto magnetic video tape.

Clearly stated above, it says that the video recorder was invented in 1951, three years before Dorothy Martin was, for want of a better description, harassed by Puharich. But even in 1954, video would not have been part of the public domain as of yet; it would still have been a relatively new innovation harbored by the US military and intelligence community for own use, long before being made commercially available.

But more disturbing is the use of the word "Captain", knowing that Puharich was sworn in as a Captain at Edgewood, Maryland. He blended what he was (a Captain) with what he saw (a video) and formulated a mind-control "theme" for Dorothy Martin, that he perpetrated on a phone line.

So, what's significant about the use of a telephone line? A lot of contemporary Targeted Individuals report what is called "business interference" in their day-to-day lives. What it amounts to is that the telephony system is hacked or coupled by the perpetrators to their system and used as a tool of harassment.

The telephony infrastructure, both land- and mobile-based can be integrated successfully with V2k to promote endless auxiliary harassment of the victim.

The fact is that John Hayes Hammond Junior, Puharich's old friend, mentor and electronics prankster, also worked for the intelligence community. He developed an amplifier that could be applied to long-distance telephone lines, which later included a method of intelligence transmission called "Telespot". Telespot is, to this day, used by perpetrators in their harassment operations.

It is to be noted that there is no evidence, whatsoever, up until this moment that Puharich was involved with the Dorothy Martin story and, by extension, the Laugheads. There is no proof that he was at all connected to the happenings at Dorothy Martin's house.

Puharich had no connection whatsoever to the flying saucer predictions and the newspaper media that was involved in mobilizing the story of the prophecies that failed, according to the book written by Festinger et al.

However, it came to pass around a year and a half after the Dorothy Martin incident, in 1956, that Puharich, Arthur M Young, trustee of the Round Table Foundation, and yet another psychic, Peter Hurkos (who is still to be discussed), went to Mexico to do clairvoyance work at an ancient site to locate artefacts possibly buried there.

At the hotel in which they were staying, the Hôtel de Paris, they met none other than Dr Charles and Lillian Laughead. There, the Laugheads claimed to be working with a young man who was in “telepathic contact with alien races”.

It is a coincidence that is beyond a miracle, that Puharich would run into the Laugheads in Mexico. It is furthermore beyond coincidence that the Laugheads, who by that time resided in California and no longer in Lansing, would once again be in contact with a new “contactee” (same or similar to Dorothy Martin).

Puharich also failed to make mention in any of his extensive writing that the Laugheads had narrowly avoided being committed to a mental institution and had been widely stigmatized by the American press for the Atlantis and Mu prediction fiasco of Dorothy Martin, that they had bought into.

Instead of seeing the Laugheads as undesirable or crackpot companions, quite the opposite occurred: Puharich, not in the least perturbed, befriended them so that a correspondence could ensue.

Shortly after returning to the United States, Puharich and Arthur Young received a letter from the Laugheads that contained important communiqué from the so-called extraterrestrials that the young man in California was “channelling”. The letter referred to The Nine directly and particularly the exact date of their first contact with Dr Vinod, namely the 31st of December 1952.

There were two communications given, and one of them was “very similar” to the one spoken by Vinod at his first channelling:

"M calling: At the moment of our advent, December 31, 1952, your most spectacular phase of work began. We are Nine principles and forces. The nature of our work is to accentuate certain directions as will fulfil the destiny of creation. We used the body or brain of Dr. "V." We can and are using other bodies also."

To all concerned, this appeared to be “exciting independent corroboration” of the existence of The Nine, The Nine Principles, or The Council of Nine as they were called.

But, in my opinion, the communiqué seemed to address Puharich himself and not an audience, making reference to his “spectacular phase of work”. It read like an open invitation to Puharich to continue partaking of The Nine’s “spectacular” vision, thereby justifying his interest in the subject of contactees of extraterrestrial entities.

To be honest, the message was nothing but a robustly self-congratulatory puff-piece (Puharich talking to himself through the young man, first via feedback and then on paper as written down by the Laugheads), where he self-acknowledged that the V2k debut of Vinod, the first person to be semi-publicly humiliated with V2k, was a runaway success.

Puharich also self-acknowledged the fact that other people, such as Dorothy Martin and now, the young, Californian man of the Laugheads and other, yet to be named victims, were being bodily and mentally “used”, as Vinod had been used! In Vinod’s case, he was set to a timer and subjected to a form of forced speech, a perpetrator activity known to Targeted Individuals to this very day.

The extraterrestrial being (or “Man’s concept of God”) is a major, and dare I say lazy, theme that is used in contemporary V2k operations. When I was in a deep state of mind-control, at the beginning of the V2k, I had extensive free-form audio delusions of extraterrestrials trying to land on planet Earth.

I was told over and over again (due to repeater technology; the very same that was used on Dorothy Martin) that the aliens were waiting out there, trying to land, but were unable to do so, because I had failed to secure their safe passage to the planet. In almost every instance, I was told that they would attempt to land again.

In one instance I was told that there was a spaceship (or a series of space ships) filled with a flesh-eating lizard species looking to colonize earth (something like the “V” series on television). And in one, related scenario, I was asked whether I would prefer to be regurgitated by giant lizards for two thousand years, or would I rather be a rat in a cage, at which time a small cage was shown to me, in which a rat trod in safety, but endlessly, on an exercise wheel for two millennia.

Creative as I am, I do not have the propensity to concoct a scenario as the one described, in an ordinary mental state. However, in a state of V2k mind-control the above scenario and even more horrific and unspeakable scenarios are more than possible, based upon the principle of the hijacked belief system (Fancy) of a V2k victim.

In a worst-case scenario, a V2k victim might go out and gun down a number of innocent people based on a begotten belief, before being neutralized (killed) by security personnel scrambling to contain the situation and then buried, without honor, as a shameful mass murderer.

I recall the story of Diana (not her real name, to protect her identity), a 78 year old V2k victim and client who read The 7 Keys to V2k and The Truth Will Set You Free. She wrote in her emails that she was being pursued, triangulated and harassed by an alien named John (story concocted by a particularly lazy perpetrator), who claimed to be orbiting the earth in a spaceship, threatening to land and come over to her house, among other things.

Diana then went to the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and reported that she was hearing voices and being harassed on and on by John the alien. The nice folk at the FBI were sympathetic but not much help, possibly believing that the old lady was mentally ill, schizophrenic or suffering from some kind of age-related dementia. They told her to go home, keep tabs on John and let them know if he ever landed and where, so that they could arrest him.

It is an exercise in futility to report V2k activity to the Feds because the current FBI appears to have no knowledge or recollection of Project Moonstruck. They thus do not acknowledge moonstruck victims, or Targeted Individuals, as we are known today.

More importantly, the extraterrestrial being paradigm started by Puharich and his associate at Edgewood is still part of the V2k experience or landscape for many Targeted Individuals to this day. The basic V2k invention hasn’t changed much over the course of decades, although nine additional major electromagnetic mind-control programs were tabled after Project Moonstruck, in order to build upon basic principles of V2k.

The Story of Harry Stone

We return now to the year 1954, the year in which Puharich was doing his second tour of duty at the Army Chemical Center in Edgewood. The work of the Round Table Foundation was being continued by Arthur M Young and Alice Bouverie, two of the Foundation's trustees. Alice Bouverie, in fact, was the one, who organized, through her wealthy circle of friends, the $100 000 research grant needed so that Puharich could do the Faraday Cage experimentation with Eileen Garrett.

It was at a society party hosted by Bouverie in New York, that Puharich first met Harry Stone, a Dutch artist with a gift for psychometry, the extrasensory ability to read objects by touching them.

At the time of Puharich's second tour of duty, Bouverie was "working" with Harry Stone. On the 16th of June 1954, she gave him a gold pendant, a cartouche that reportedly belonged to Queen Tiye, mother of Akhenaten, Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt (13000 BC), in order to test his psychometric abilities.

According to Bep Hermans, upon admiring the pendant, Harry Stone suddenly began to tremble and get a crazy, staring look in his eyes. He staggered about the room and then fell into a chair.

He went into a trance and started making utterances, first in a strange language and then in English. Stone even asked for a pencil and paper and drew Egyptian hieroglyphs that identified the entity that was trying to make itself known through him as Rahotep, high priest of Heliopolis during the reign of Pharaohs Sneferu or Khufu of the Fourth Dynasty of Egypt!

In English, Stone described a mushroom that could stimulate psychic abilities and drew a troop of mushrooms on a page that was later "identified" by Puharich as Amanita muscaria, or fly agaric, a psychedelic 'shroom reputedly used by the shamans of many different cultures to get high on and go astral travelling (known as Out of Body Experiences (OBEs) or tripping in modern times).

Having read The Stargate Conspiracy, I can tell that authors Picknett and Prince were suspicious of the contrived Egyptian story having written the following in their book:

Not surprisingly, Bouverie was very excited by this material. She immediately contacted Puharich at the Army base [Edgewood] for advice about what to do next, sending him the drawings and a copy of Stone's strange utterances. Puharich took then to another Army doctor on the site - who just happened to be an expert in extremely rare and archaic forms of hieroglyphs - and, to his surprise, verified that Stone's writings were indeed ancient Egyptian.

Picknett and Prince were unimpressed like myself, and unlike Alice Bouverie, by two things, firstly that the channelled one, namely Rahotep, was not just any Egyptian, such as a lowly house servant perhaps, a fisherman fishing the Nile river for a subsistence living, or a public servant or praefetus urbi, as they were called, but significantly, a high priest of Heliopolis!

The reason why this fanfare is so contemptible is that Heliopolis is associated to the worship of the sun god Ra, or the local deification of him, Atum-Ra, originator of the mythical Ennead (group of nine deities all worshipped at Heliopolis) consisting of himself (the god Atum), his children Shu and Tefnut, their children Geb and Nut and their children's children, Osiris, Isis, Set, and Nephthys, which total to nine.

So, in other words, the channelled message once again referred to The Nine, but in a cryptic and roundabout manner, basically introducing an element of coincidence that is beyond tolerance, to the scenario.

It can further be said that the message, as per Puharich's modus operandi, borrowed heavily from texts to do with history. But Puharich, who was in certain instances not as smart as a 21st century fifth grader, used a mishmash of history, under which recreated circumstances he could test his invention. We have Harry Stone channelling information from Egypt, whereas Amanita muscaria is said to have originated in Northern Europe, where it was first recorded as being used by the shamans of Siberia.

Secondly, Picknett and Prince were no doubt suspicious, as I am too, that Puharich had an Army colleague who held a degree in Egyptology already on hand in Edgewood, to verify the information, another coincidence too synchronous to be convincing, or believed.

I would like to submit, in this indictment of Puharich, that Stone, who channelled "after apparently having a fit" according to Picknett and Prince's account, was a recipient of "k" material on his facial nervous system.

What would account for the "fit" is Puharich suddenly and sharply increasing the presence of covert radio frequencies, in the presence of Alice Bouverie, so that Stone staggered around, acutely alive with neural feedback, before collapsing, or crashing, in a chair.

The description of Stone provided by Bep Hermans, that he got "a crazy, staring look in his eyes" is consistent with being "moonstruck" or having the empirically-verified appearance of a "moonstruck" person; a Targeted Individual.

It is interesting to note how Puharich would V2k seemingly unimportant individuals, or individuals transient to a high society or academic scene, such as Dorothy Martin, homemaker, the young, Californian man of the Laugheads and Harry Stone, but never one of the Laugheads themselves, or Alice Bouverie herself, at least not as direct or apparent targets.

Puharich needed to have persons obviously involved (such as the Laugheads) or someone of upstanding reputation (such as Alice Bouverie) to validate independently, or corroborate, the messages expounded by the V2k victims and in the case of Alice Bouverie he needed to keep the excitement alive or stand the chance of losing her support and not to mention her funding.

A conspiracy website, that is less than complimentary towards the Astor family of Alice Bouverie, says that they are a wealthy, elite family who partake (or partook) of occult practices. Their family name is believed to be a derivative of the name Ashtoreth, a goddess worshipped in ancient times in places like Syria, Phoenicia and Canaan.

The same website describes her as follows:

Ava Alice Muriel Astor was an occultist.

She was born in 1902, was pretty but also a very serious woman. She was a very strong willed person that was able to dominate a person in her presence unless they were also strong willed. She was into Egyptian magic and believed she was the reincarnation of an Egyptian princess and a disciple of Ikhnaton [Akhenaten]. Alice Astor may have been one of the first people to enter King Tut's [Tutankhamen's] tomb, where she got herself a necklace.

So, if we look at the lineage of King Tutankhamen, it is clear that his father was Akhenaten and thus his grandmother was Tiye, which means that Alice Bouverie, nee Astor, may indeed have owned the “necklace” (cartouche) of Akhenaten's mother; the very same ancient artefact that Harry Stone fondled on the day of his V2k debut.

But is there a legitimate reason to believe that Harry Stone went into a real psychic trance because of handling an ancient and apparently genuine artefact contained within the tomb of Tutankhamen, and being spiritually possessed by Queen Tiye, mother of Akhenaten?

There is anecdotal evidence to the contrary. It should be taken into consideration that John Hayes Hammond Junior, Puharich's friend and mentor, believed in the existence of haunted objects, or objects with a spiritual attachment to them. Hammond, another occultist, was fascinated with this concept, accounting for the vast amount of historical artefacts that he collected and housed at Hammond Castle.

It stands to reason that Puharich borrowed the concept from Hammond and used it on Stone because he was reputedly adept at psychometry, or the ability to read objects. This afforded Puharich the opportunity, yet again, to experiment with the V2k invention out in the open, without getting caught.

And how else am I to describe the vivacious life of Alice Bouverie, who was even a real princess at one time, married to a Russian prince, Prince Sergei Obolensky, but to say that she was a spirited adventurer (Indiana Jones type) and grave robber, on account of the fact that she took a souvenir from King Tutankhamen's tomb.

Being at the opening of the tomb, an event that made world history, would not have been possible had Alice Bouverie (Astor) been a common sort, such as the likes of you and me perhaps, but she was not. She had an exceptional pedigree and lineage; dare I say a sense of entitlement on account of her familial and exponentially wealthy heritage.

According to The Sacred Mushroom, written by Puharich and published in 1959 on the back of the utterances made by Harry Stone channelling Rahotep, mighty high priest of Heliopolis, he was stationed at Edgewood, Maryland. The conversation between Puharich and the other doctor with the degree in Egyptology stationed there went like this:

“Well,” [the Egyptologist] said, “In my opinion I think this material may be an instance of telepathy. Your friend Alice undoubtedly knows some Egyptian... and your so-called somnambulistic individual [Harry Stone] just picked it up by telepathy and wrote it down.”

The above utterance by the other doctor shows that, at the very least, other people at the military base not involved in the development of Project Moonstruck knew that Puharich was there to conduct experimentation with telepathy, or a form of telepathy that was above their security clearance level (a form of beyond telepathy, in terms of the phrase coined by Puharich when he wrote a book of the same name, later).

Perhaps that is why the Egyptian-educated doctor humoured Puharich that day with his knowledge. His answer to Puharich was what I would describe as couched in extreme diplomacy and politeness. To me this indicates the first stirrings of the pervasive fear surrounding the militarized operations of V2k mind-control.

Puharich was, for want of a better word, bragging to a fellow officer about his power in wielding a godlike and mind-blowing control over human beings in not so many words and the other doctor, not intellectually slow because he was also a military intelligence operative working on his own sensitive enough projects, would have been astute enough to recognize it as such.

By the time Puharich finished his tour of duty with the US military in April 1955, or having finished producing Project Moonstruck, he returned to Warrenton but was dismayed to find that all work at the laboratory had ceased and that the trustees had closed down the Round Table Foundation. Someone had even removed or rescued the experimental barn animals and their cages stood empty, in a creepy defection of sorts.

Devastated, but not to be deterred, Puharich contacted (who else) but Alice Bouverie and with her help, worked tirelessly to re-open the Foundation, hiring two new staff members so that he could continue his “work” with Harry Stone.

But although he worked throughout 1955 with Harry Stone, Stone’s messages from Rahotep became “more and more feeble”. During his final communication on the 7th of February 1956, he apparently covered a page with poorly-drawn hieroglyphs that were completely illegible.

Stone’s V2k feedback was busy winding down; becoming slower, more incoherent and no longer viable.

Not too much later, on the 19th of July 1956, Alice Bouverie, known also as Ava Alice Muriel Astor died, according to Wikipedia, ostensibly and regrettably due to a stroke, in her East Sixty-First Street upmarket residence in New York, aged 54.

But Bep’s account in her biography cast doubt over Bouverie’s death, saying that she had been in perfect health only days before and that she had been in her usual, joyful mood. Furthermore, the coroner could not find any physical cause and her death remained inexplicable.

And according to The Stargate Conspiracy, there seemed to be something more to the death of Alice Bouverie than meets the eye.

As with The Nine’s communications, strange phenomena accompanied the Rahotep channellings. Occasionally Alice Bouverie herself went into a trance and, via automatic writing, produced messages that corresponded with those of Harry Stone. This is similar to the way in which Dorothy Martin produced automatic writing.

And so we come to learn that Alice Bouverie was both funding Puharich and at the time appearing in a Rahotep-channelling sideshow, as an accompaniment to Harry Stone, the main V2k act. I’m really not surprised by the news as I know that Puharich resided with Alice Bouverie in New York from time to time, giving him full access to her house and Alice Bouverie herself.

After the news of Bouverie's death broke, Puharich became ashen; his eyes were red and swollen and he refused to talk to anyone, including his second wife, Bep Hermans, for a week, staying in his room.

Apparently Alice Bouverie was well-liked in the community so her death cast a shadow over all who knew her. And I ultimately wonder about her sudden and premature death at the youthful age of 54 after coming into contact with Puharich, having been in perfect health only days before.

I would like to make special mention of the fact that deaths can and do occur based on the radio frequencies and feedback used during V2k operations. Feedback, particularly the feedback in social systems packaged at Edgewood under the militarized auspices of Project Moonstruck, can be used for a great many nefarious things, including murder.

It is not easy to talk about the deaths caused by V2k, but it stands to reason that this topic must be discussed because Targeted Individuals think it's about time that the alphabet agencies who partake so diligently of plausible deniability, such as the CIA (Central Idiots Agency) and the FBI (Federal Bureau of Idiots) should take responsibility for it.

The Story of Virginia "Jinny" Puharich

At this time, I think it is appropriate to talk about Jinny Puharich, Henry's first wife, whose story is scattered throughout Bep's biography.

Puharich married Jinny in 1943 while he was studying at North-Western University. She was the daughter of a prominent doctor from Madison, Wisconsin. They had their first child, a daughter, in 1947, by which time Puharich was already having an affair with another woman, called Jane (not her real name).

So why would I publish sordid details about Puharich, such as the fact that he was having an affair? Investigator Terry L Milner believed that it was appropriate to mention the fact, because it underpins Puharich's character. Although I don't usually appreciate character assassination, Puharich himself opened the door to it with his V2k invention.

Character assassination is one of the major parameters of the V2k feedback of voice-to-skull victims; a pure distillation of causal feedback and hegemony that the perpetrators use to immobilize a V2k victim for life, making him or her useless to society.

And so, it is my duty as the investigator into Puharich's criminal activities, to bring his personal predilections and deficiency in character to the fore. Puharich was not a faithful man, but a philanderer, by all accounts, and worse.

When Jinny found out about the affair in 1947, she left him (as did Jane, the other woman) but reconciled with him later, around the time he was invited to go to Camden, Maine by the Balokovics. She stayed with him through the years in Camden and went with him to Glen Cove, where she was the hostess of Warrenton.

In May 1951 Jinny gave birth to their second daughter and seemed to be happy. But 1952, the year of Project Moonstruck, seemed to be a turning point for Puharich, as well as their marriage and according to Bep Hermans "their happy life changed":

Although 1952 had been good for Andrija, both in scientific and economic progress, it had been a bad year for Jinny. Taking care of two small children, and running the Round Table alone much of the time had taken a heavy toll. After bearing another [3rd] daughter in August [1952] she suffered severely from postnatal depression. It was unfortunately the beginning of a grave illness.

The above might not raise any red flags as of yet, but it was what Bep Hermans reported next about Jinny that is extremely telling.

While Andrija was conducting his research with Harry Stone, poor Jinny was in and out of the hospital. She suffered from schizophrenia, and had to undergo insulin shock treatment.

The first time had been in the summer of 1954. When I met Andrija on Friday, April 13, 1956, he had just returned from Madison, Wisconsin, Jinny's hometown, where she was again hospitalized.

Here, we are to believe without question that Jinny Puharich was schizophrenic. I would concur that her situation was very grave indeed, but certainly not due to the psychiatric illness to which it was attributed.

It doesn't require a giant leap of the imagination to determine that Jinny Puharich was a V2k victim and that she was being tortured with voice-to-skull by her own husband; the ultimate, psychological warfare version of it, or Project Moonstruck, perfected at Edgewood, Maryland, where Puharich was stationed during the summer of 1954!

Puharich favored Warren S McCulloch's preferred diagnosis of schizophrenia for a V2k victim over the wellbeing of his own wife. The filth that was Henry K Puharich not only condemned Jinny to V2k, but the hospital then subjected her to unspeakable insulin shock treatment, which, according to Wikipedia, is "a form of psychiatric treatment in which patients were repeatedly injected with large doses of insulin in order to produce daily comas over several weeks."

At the time Bep Hermans was a babysitter, a childminder and Puharich needed her to take care of the children at times while Jinny was in Wisconsin, suffering from V2k mind-control.

They fell in love, and as their love bloomed, so Jinny Puharich's mental status deteriorated. At one point she was released from the hospital and went to work part-time for her father, but it seemed that the treatment she had received at the hospital had not worked (no surprise) and in her letters to Bep Hermans she sounded mentally confused.

Jinny granted Puharich a divorce, which opened the way for him to marry Bep Hermans. They married in Las Vegas in December 1957.

Just over a year later, on 23 February 1959, Jinny Puharich committed suicide by jumping off the top floor of the hospital where her father was the superintendent.

And when you read Bep Herman's biography, Puharich's motivation for subjugating Jinny becomes clear. After her untimely death, he went to Madison to pick up his daughters and returned to Bep Hermans, who was pregnant with their first child together.

Puharich hadn't told his daughters that he had remarried and that his new wife was pregnant, but strangely, the girls displayed a complete lack of grief about their mother's death and were instead delighted to see Bep Hermans, who'd looked after them before as their babysitter!

Puzzled, Bep raised the subject with Puharich, but he told her to shut up and threatened to leave her if she ever spoke to the girls about their mother again.

To me, this story really hits home for a number of reasons. Note how easy it was for Puharich the abject monster to get rid of his first wife, of whom he'd grown tired, in order to take a new wife (presumably a younger, prettier one).

As V2k victims, we all know the terror that Jinny must have been going through as a mind-control victim. It is a terrifying, dark and lonely place where you can't reach out, and no one can reach you, a fact that I don't need to reiterate. Jinny didn't make it back to the real world, but I pray her torture and death will be ennobled as it helps to raise awareness and understanding of the serious V2k issue we now face in the 21st century.

I condemn Puharich in the strongest possible terms for murdering Jinny Puharich with V2k feedback-based mind-control so that he could take a new wife. In addition to murdering his own children's mother, he then went on to pretend that she had never existed, silencing the girls and getting them to embrace a new mother so that he could start a new life, baggage-free.

The Story of Peter Hurkos and the Luminous Mass

We now return to the story of Puharich, and the year 1956. This was the same year in which Puharich met with the Laugheads in Mexico and the year in which Alice Bouverie, nee Astor, died.

Puharich met another psychic, Peter Hurkos, through a mutual friend, and Hurkos came to stay at Puharich's estate, Warrenton, in Maine. Be reminded that Puharich was famous for his associations with psychics and Peter Hurkos, a genuine Dutch psychic, was no exception.

We already know that Puharich was associated to Eileen Garret, psychic, Dr Vinod, psychic and Harry Stone, who practiced psychometry, a form of psychic ability. Two of these individuals had already been subjected to V2k by Puharich as semi-public spectacles, namely Vinod and Stone, while Eileen Garret was put to a Faraday Cage, implying the presence of radio-receiving V2k.

And so it was on the morning after the death of Alice Bouverie the night before - although Puharich didn't know it yet - that Peter Hurkos arrived early at the so-called laboratory of Puharich, looking upset and as if he hadn't slept. He told Puharich a "strange story".

He said that he'd seen a "luminous mass" in the hall during the night. He said that when he looked at the "ball" it suddenly moved towards him and he even felt a cold breeze "on his face" as it went by that frightened him.

This event happened shortly after Hurkos came to Warrenton and Puharich was waiting for him there with a form of Chemical Vapor Deposition that we now know as R-PECVD (Remote Plasma-Enhanced Chemical Vapor Deposition). Puharich possibly thought that he would V2k Hurkos; turn him into a mind-control stooge like the other psychics by starting implantation processes and procedures.

Behold, the cold breeze “on his face”, or, more precisely, an attempted phase-transition deposition of solid state material on his facial nervous system!

If you Google the words Hurkos used, namely “luminous mass” and add the word “plasma” to it, so that the operable search term used is “luminous mass plasma”, one of the entries on page one of Google search results refers to a book called Luminous Chemical Vapor Deposition and Interface Engineering by an unrelated Asian academic, Hirotsugu Yasuda, in which he speaks extensively about the “k” polymerization process, deposition rates, monomers and carrier gas, in this case Argon.

So what we have here is that Puharich deliberately tried to polymerize (implant) Hurkos with a plasma cloud or “afterglow” at Warrenton. But Hurkos was astute; he optically recognized the luminosity of the phenomenon and called it a “luminous mass”, unwittingly identifying it partially by name, to his credit!

But upon mentioning it, Puharich did not take Hurkos “very seriously”. In fact he suggested that they “go to work and forget about luminous balls, ghosts and spirits”, which is uncharacteristic of Puharich, who was in fact exceptionally interested in the paranormal and had already made his interest official.

Later that same morning, the news broke that Alice Bouverie had died. Peter Hurkos, still shaken by the previous night’s ordeal, attributed the luminous mass he had seen to the death of Bouverie, perhaps an omen or manifestation of her spiritual “crossing over”.

I am outraged by Puharich’s denial. He was an unbelievable creep with a hidden agenda who preyed on the likes of Alice Bouverie and Peter Hurkos, and not to mention the other early Targeted Individuals who were directly ambushed and polymerized (implanted) by Puharich using R-PECVD techniques and technologies invisible to the naked eye.

So let’s take a look at the V2k victims in chronological order.

There were the two, earliest victims from Bellevue (listening to intracranial radio, a fact already admitted by Puharich and McCulloch), followed by Dr Vinod, who channelled The Nine at Puharich’s house. Then it was the turn of Dorothy Martin of the Laugheads, who heard voices and repeatedly acted out anticipated alien spaceship landings in her back yard.

Thereafter Harry Stone, who suddenly appeared “moonstruck” at Alice Bouverie’s house, Jinny Puharich, who committed suicide by jumping from the hospital’s top floor while enduring marathon “schizophrenic” episodes, and the latest (second) victim around Charles Laughead, a Californian “contactee” who also channelled The Nine.

The above count of people amounts to six; all can be linked, and verifiably so, to Henry Puharich. Out of these, four can be directly linked to Puharich through personal contact and two indirectly, through Charles Laughead. In the case of the contactees through Charles Laughead, one was direct (the Californian contactee) and the other retrospective (Dorothy Martin).

It is fortunate that Peter Hurkos managed to escape from this mischievous scenario relatively unscathed. He went on to be a famous psychic detective who assisted police departments on high-profile murder investigations such as the Boston Strangler serial killer case and the Sharon Tate murder in Los Angeles, orchestrated by Charles Manson; helping to put the killers behind bars.

1958 was a particularly memorable year in the life of Puharich. It was also significant due to the permanent closure of The Round Table Foundation and the writing of the first patent in the Hearing Aid (mind-control) patent series. And shortly after, early in 1959, Jinny jumped from the hospital window, ending an era in Puharich's life and ushering in a new one, as we will see in Chapter three.

The Sacred Mushroom

I would like to turn now to The Stargate Conspiracy, written by authors Picknett and Prince. In their book they wrote the following:

But the 1960s present Puharich's life at its most elusive, although it is known that between 1958 and 1971 he was research director for the Intelectron Corporation, a company he founded to develop medical devices.

Puharich's life at the time, although not very public, can be traced from a documented V2k perspective, as well as the personal perspective of Bep Hermans. Basically, by this time in Puharich's life, the invention phase of V2k was over, having been covered during the time that The Round Table Foundation was in existence, since 1948.

The next phase of Puharich's work was set to begin, in which he would document the proceeds of the V2k invention, a process that would take approximately 14 years. In between the documentation process, Puharich would take time off for his own pursuits, such as travelling and writing.

He appeared to have little to do with V2k in a personal capacity during this ambit but set off in a related direction, where he pursued the esoteric in seeking out shamanic opportunities and experiences.

It was around 1958, after Puharich and Bep Hermans were married, that the couple moved to Carmel Valley in California, leaving Glen Cove behind. There Puharich exercised his obsession with Amanita muscaria, the hallucinogenic 'shroom "described" by Harry Stone, at which time he wrote The Sacred Mushroom: Key to the Door of Eternity [The Sacred Mushroom] (1.82Mb), an almost completely meritless book that you can download from my server for free, and read it cover to cover, if at all interested in Puharich's rhetoric (major yawn).

After The Sacred Mushroom was published in 1959, there was an increased interest in the psychedelic mushroom among the 1960s community. Puharich and an associate, Paul Jones, organized a 'shroom party for a "select group of people" including academics from Stanford University, and invited Bep Hermans to attend in order to take notes, as if an experiment were taking place.

But the 'shroom party took a sleazy and salacious turn. By the time Bep Hermans entered the room, the party was already in full swing. There was a couple openly engaging in public sex, while another attendee was singing an opera, Aida. Paul Jones, co-organizer of the party, was vomiting from ingesting the 'shrooms. And Bep Hermans herself was being persistently groped by a guy from Stanford, to which she, as a newly married woman, took obvious umbrage.

She said in her biography that the "craziness" of the mushroom cult even followed her home, where she told Puharich to get rid of the "weirdoes" or she'd call the police. The children were also terrified, although Puharich, according to Bep, didn't care at all:

Was I [Bep] really that stupid, he [Puharich] had yelled, that I didn't understand that he was merely studying the workings of the human mind, and that because of his research someday the mentally ill could be cured?

But the truth of the matter is that Puharich already knew that his invention caused mind-control. In fact, he knew well, and had known, since 1948, that his invention caused a V2k victim, later a moonstruck individual, to be perceived as mentally ill. Yet, he had the temerity to shout at his wife that he would someday cure all mental illness.

Puharich had found out from someone that there was a ritualistic mushroom cult that existed in Mexico. So in June 1960, he, accompanied by eight other people, including Paul Jones, his 'shroom-loving associate (a total of nine) went on an expedition to Mexico. All, with the exception of Puharich, became ill and had to return to the United States. But Puharich went on alone with a guide, where he was joined by a few other people included a translator and a nurse.

It was near the village of Juquila in the state of Oaxaca, about 200 miles south of Mexico City, that Puharich found what he was looking for. One night, a local witchdoctor, called a Brujo, performed a mushroom ritual - apparently for the first time ever in front of a Caucasian person - and Puharich was allowed to take film footage of the ritual. Puharich had brought so much equipment with him, including camera equipment, that it required two hired mules to convey the equipment into the hills near the village for the ceremony.

After Puharich returned to the United States, the University of Washington partially financed Puharich and a 14-member scientific team to go back to Juquila, accompanied by a television crew, where they took footage of the expedition. The footage was then broadcast on a show called One Step Beyond.

On the expedition to Mexico, Puharich met David "Daddy" Bray, a Hawaiian who also just so happened to be the generational high priest of Hawaii, a Kahuna. It wasn't long before Puharich, accompanied for a few days by Bep Hermans, went to Hawaii as guests of the Kahuna where they witnessed a ritual ceremony to the fire goddess Pele.

Puharich was, in due course, initiated into the high priesthood and emerged from the scenario an adept shaman of the Hawaiian mystery tradition, a Kahuna, rumored to be the one who would take over from "Daddy" Bray some day.

For Puharich, things were happening on the home front, too. Back in the United States, in May 1961, he announced that a group of New York businessmen had invested $300 000 in his so-called hearing aid research. He then established Intelectron Corporation, under which most of his patents are famously held.

Puharich, Bep Hermans and the children moved away from the Carmel area in California to a ten-bedroom house and estate in Ossining, a town located along the Hudson River in Westchester County, in the state of New York, close to New York City.

But Bep Hermans was no longer happy. She'd grown tired of always being alone, singlehandedly running the big house and looking after the children while Puharich took off on one adventure or another.

And within the next year and a half, Bep discovered that Puharich was having another affair. She filed a temporary maintenance order in 1963 and moved back to California.

Two years later, Bep and Puharich tried to make their relationship work again, but the reconciliation failed and Bep filed for divorce, leaving the United States with her two young children, Yvonne and Andy and going back to the Netherlands, her native country.

At the time of publishing Memories of a Maverick in 1997, Bep Hermans still resided in the Netherlands. Puharich's son Andy is, to this very day, the administrator and webmaster of his official website, Puharich.nl/, where Puharich's memory is preserved for historical posterity.

I'll go out on a limb and say that Puharich's family would never endorse The Radiohead Protocol, because they have long ago closed ranks around Puharich's memory, refusing to acknowledge anything negative about him, preferring that he should be remembered for having made a positive contribution to society.

But in fact, I'd say, that the only positive and innocent contribution that Puharich ever made, is the patent titled Method and Apparatus for Applying an Orthopaedic Cast or the Like, filed in 1958 under the auspices of Feather Cast Corporation, an apparently pedestrian healing invention for fractures, I trust. Although I haven't read the patent; I pray that it is so: that Puharich made at least one device that was pro-human, instead of overwhelmingly anti-human and planet-torturing inhuman.

Because even his later patent, US4394230A, namely Method and Apparatus for Splitting Water Molecules, filed in 1981, is a foreboding patent that I suspect has to do with adverse weather control mechanisms within the V2k system that I have personally experienced as a V2k victim, circa 2014 to 2016, the years in which we've had the fiercest-ever so-called El Nino on record.

Apart from bushwhacking in Mexico and getting high on 'shrooms and rituals in Hawaii, Puharich had been busy writing. During the years 1960 and 1961, Puharich wrote one of his most important books, Beyond Telepathy that was published in 1962. Note that I have no comment on the title of Puharich's book, because I refuse to read it.

In 1962 he also wrote and submitted for filing, two patents in the hearing-aid (V2k mind-control) patent series, namely Means for Aiding Hearing by Electrical Stimulation of the Facial Nerve System (in January) and Solid State Hearing System (in October). These were followed forthwith by the filing of Electrically Stimulated Hearing with Signal Feedback in January 1963.

It wasn't too much later after Bep left Puharich for the first time in 1963 and went back to California, that Puharich was invited to go to Brazil to study a paranormal healer or psychic surgeon called Arigó, also known as José Pedro de Freitas, who went into trances and performed anomalous medical procedures on patients with a rusty knife.

People in Brazil queued in their thousands to see him when he was in session, believing in his almost magical ability to heal the sick because in many cases, he inexplicably cured them.

Puharich studied Arigó for many years and Arigó even did psychic surgery on Puharich himself, who had a tumor on his arm, removing a lipoma and handing it to Puharich in under ten seconds.

Regrettably, Arigó died some eight years later, in 1971, in a car crash, bringing to three the amount of people who died after having had a close association with Puharich. Let me recount the names of the dead as Alice Bouverie (nee Astor), Virginia “Jinny” Puharich and Arigó, who’s death brought his hometown, Congonhas do Campo, to a halt, and the Brazilian flag flying low, during two days of official mourning in which some 15 to 20 thousand mourners flocked to the town.

Oddly enough, two of the individuals who died were famous, namely Alice Bouverie, former princess, high-end socialite and heiress of the fabulous Astor family, and Arigó, who was a celebrity in Brazil. The third of these, namely Jinny, and in sharp contrast to the other two, died quite anonymously and was summarily scrubbed from memory by Puharich.

This speaks to the versatility of the invention, in case any of the alphabet agencies are to be caught napping. Targeted Individuals have a deep distrust of vehicular accidents, because such accidents can be orchestrated by feedback in social systems and is simply part of the moonstruck feedback package, or electromagnetic warfare in social systems.

Dr Joseph “Joe” L Lawrence and the Intelectron Corporation

There is a serious need to talk about Intelectron Corporation, and the impact it has had on society today. At the time that Puharich was bushwhacking in Mexico and Hawaii, he was, concurrently, a member (thug in a suit) of the Intelectron Corporation. You may recall that he had “corporate sponsorship” (backing) for his invention. At the same time, he also had an associate, who will not get away from my scrutiny, if at all possible.

His name was Joseph “Joe” Lubansky Lawrence, Puharich’s partner (member) in Electron Corporation. Far from being Puharich’s junior, Lawrence was actually born in 1917 and died in 1993, which means that he was one year older than Puharich and died two years before Puharich himself died, in 1995, although they both technically died aged 76.

The problem with Dr Lawrence is that he was very elusive, that there isn’t much written about him. But if I were to move swiftly forward in time, to the year of 2016, I would say that Dr Lawrence was a founding perpetrator; a perp, like Puharich. I’d say that Lawrence was responsible for cataloguing Puharich’s research, in the interest of furthering the psychological warfare aspect of V2k in its Project Moonstruck application.

So, if we go backwards in time, Puharich met Lawrence in 1953, at Edgewood, Maryland. Bep said in her biography:

In May [1958]... Andrija had contacted Joe Lawrence, the dentist he had worked with at the Army Chemical Center [at Edgewood], to carry on the hearing research they had started in 1953.

Four months after reuniting, Puharich and Lawrence produced Means for Aiding Hearing, the first patent in the hearing aid patent series, filed 25 September 1958, followed periodically by the rest of the patent series until January 1970.

Let’s go back to the year 1953. According to the timeline plotted in this book, Puharich was sworn in as Captain at Edgewood in February 1953. He was released from active duty in April 1955.

In all of that time, nothing happened, officially, at Edgewood, except for the experimentation on volunteers in the Edgewood Arsenal Human Experiments; a bit wicked perhaps (LSD and toxic substances) but ultimately forgiven experimentation on voluntary military and civilian candidates that left no long-lasting negative consequences on the incumbents; a regrettable scenario in the interest of national security. In fact, it is acknowledged that only one person died from this experimentation, whose family no doubt received the necessary, honorable financial benefits from the State.

Ostensibly, that was the sum total of Puharich's (tame) tenure at Edgewood; and likewise, Joe Lawrence didn't even receive a mention anywhere.

Indeed, Lawrence did not exist within the story or on paper until he made his debut in 1958 as the co-author of the patent, Means for Aiding Hearing. In fact, if you read The Sacred Mushroom, in which the story of Puharich partially took place at Edgewood, Lawrence does not appear in the narrative, even though he was Puharich's greatest accomplice, his wingman.

And there is certainly no mention, as I have already stated, of Puharich and/or Lawrence being involved in any V2k mind-control-related activities, whatsoever, as it is simply omitted from the sanitized version of the story.

However right in the middle of the timeframe in which Puharich and Lawrence were at Edgewood, a noteworthy event, or series of noteworthy events, was unfolding in the boring suburbs of Oak Park, Illinois.

I'm talking, of course, about the Dorothy Martin incident, in which Dorothy Martin was the first outright voice-hearing V2k (voice-to-skull) victim who's targeting clearly resembles that of Targeted Individuals today.

She began being preyed upon by V2k somewhere in 1953, but her first contact with the controlling entity, Sananda (Jesus Christ; yeah, right) was in April 1954, exactly dead-center of Puharich and Lawrence's ambit as Army doctors at Edgewood.

You will recall that Dorothy Martin went to the airfield in July 1954, where she waited for Sananda to descend in a UFO, but actually saw an apport or apparition in robust action instead, prompting her to acknowledge that she didn't know what was going on. Furthermore, Dorothy Martin famously waited for Sananda's spaceship to land in her backyard time and again in December 1954.

The point is that the above scenario was undoubtedly perpetrated by Puharich and Lawrence and that Lawrence had a dark side; he mind-controlled Dorothy Martin in a way that was about to set the bar in modern V2k perpetration. In terms of the psychological warfare aspect of the invention, Lawrence was the one who brought V2k into the homes of V2k victims, as Project Moonstruck.

Where Puharich liked the "godhood" angle of the V2k, such as the untouchable Ennead and The Nine (gods) routine in a "channelling" and/or automatic writing format, Lawrence had a more "real", snappy and streetwise approach to perpetration.

He must have foreseen that V2k would ultimately be deployed in an urban scenario, where V2k would be used guerrilla-style in the community, against the community, in their backyard, so to speak; a military assault not on the enemy of the state, you see, but their very own civilians!

Where Puharich used The Nine, Lawrence preferred extraterrestrials. Where Puharich liked his victims to channel in the old psychic medium style or by automatic writing, Lawrence preferred a more stop-and-start approach.

His victim, Dorothy Martin, was, for example, instructed to anticipate a future event. The anticipation would build and build tremendously till the appointed hour... at which time nothing would happen, in a monumental, Fancy-backed disappointment. The clock would tick over with regularity, while the anticipated event failed to take place in a shocking non-manifestation. Then, it would start all over again, with minor variations in the detail, V2k mind-control-style.

The only sure thing at the time was the “disconfirmation” being studied by Festinger et al, the academic infiltrators at Dorothy Martin’s house who did not realize that they were actually studying the work of another group of infiltrators, Puharich et al, and that both groups were in fact studying belief systems, with Dorothy Martin’s home and mind being used as an academic battleground for intellectual dominion.

The above map segment of the Eastern seaboard of the United States, provided by Google, shows the location of Edgewood, Maryland, where Puharich and Lawrence were stationed at the Army Chemical Center at the time of Dorothy Martin’s targeting. The red marker (red flag), northwest of Edgewood, identifies where Dorothy Martin was situated, some 725 miles away, near Chicago, Illinois.

But distance was no object for “Sananda” and his assistant from “Clarion”, nor Sananda’s alter-ego, Captain Video, whose targeting of Dorothy Martin was long-range V2k and long-distance telephone targeting.

In other words, it looks as though Puharich and Lawrence were conducting distance experimentation, in which their involvement in the scenario would remain forever undisclosed and untraceable, in the very same way that perpetrators conduct their operations to this very day.

This psychological warfare model of V2k marked a departure for Puharich from his usual hands-on approach of observing a subject “empirically” to a distance targeting model that would ensure and maintain utmost anonymity, secrecy and confidentiality for Puharich and Lawrence, and now, V2k perpetrators, who enjoy the military-grade security benefits of the invention, produced at Edgewood.

To a substantial extent, it was Dr Joseph Lawrence who was responsible for some of the nastier features of the current V2k invention, the psychological warfare component of it such as the too-close and personal, but paradoxically faraway approach to perpetration, and the vindictive nature of Project Moonstruck.

If you look at the timeline, it's clear that nobody died on account of V2k until Lawrence entered the scene. Almost directly after, Alice Bouverie died, followed by Jinny Puharich and later, Arigó, the psychic surgeon.

So, who was Joseph "Joe" Lubansky Lawrence exactly? I'm afraid no one really knows, as his life is not as well documented as Puharich's.

If you read The Stargate Conspiracy, authors Picknett and Prince make the following general (and not to mention startling and correct) observation about Puharich:

What was Puharich's role? There is no doubt that he was very deeply committed to much of the mind control experimentation of the military/CIA. He was certainly no mere Army doctor, whose work was confined to handing out pills and potions.

And likewise, I would say the same or similar, about Joseph Lawrence. He was a dentist or a "dentist", who worked side by side with Puharich, the "doctor" on mind-control experimentation.

Or, if I put it to you in another way, what good would a dentist be to the invention of a hearing aid device? That's like going to the clinic with a hearing problem and insisting that a dentist to see to it, so that the clinic staff think you've lost your mind (LOL).

The reason for Joe Lawrence's presence was because he was a specialist in dental practice and dental nerves, the so-called "receptor organ" of Puharich's dormant facial hearing system, on which the V2k invention relies.

The only thing I could find online about Joseph L Lawrence was his death record. It states that Lawrence was born to Russian parents. Till his death in 1993 of "cardiopulmonary arrest", his occupation was stated as "dentist".

Incidentally, he was buried in Mount Ararat Cemetery, Route 109 (Farmingdale Road), East Farmingdale, a possible precognitive indictment on me for using the term "farmer" to describe those who refuse to confront the reality of V2 (facial nerve) hearing and the real micro-technology implants (k) that constitute V2k, as I have discussed throughout my books.

And it comes as no surprise, at least to me, that the ones responsible for Project Moonstruck are a Croat of Eastern-European origin (Puharich) and a Russian (Lawrence), whose philosophies infiltrated the United States at frequency level, and continue to infiltrate unhindered to this day; the very thing the US feared most: infiltration by the "communists" and "pinks" spoken about by researcher Terry L Milner in Ratting out Puharich. And I mean no offence to my Eastern-bloc readers who are also V2k victims; I am merely pointing out a historical irony.

Between the years of 1958 and 1971, in accordance with the timeline of patents filed by Puharich and his research associate, Dr Joe Lawrence, in the intervening years, the following patents fall precisely into the “elusive” timeframe identified in The Stargate Conspiracy:

2995633: Means for Aiding Hearing (filed 25 September 1958)

So, as Picknett and Prince, and indeed Targeted Individuals can plainly see once I have unpacked the information thus, that Puharich and Lawrence were busy patenting the V2k invention in the god awful set of patents listed above. Of course, I have already written quite extensively about the first four patents in The 7 Keys to V2k and will talk more about the hearing aid (mind-control) patent series throughout this book.

They (Picknett, Prince and Milner) always knew that Puharich was worth investigating and by now, they should know why. Puharich first researched and experimented on V2k victims then patented the “k” and feedback mind-control invention.

It can thus be concluded that Intelectron Corporation, like the Round Table Foundation, was nothing more than a front; in this particular case, a corporate conduit for V2k mind-control activities intended to be rolled out against homeland civilians.

The Story of Uri Geller and the Re-emergence of The Nine

In 1969 Puharich met and married his third wife, Rebecca Alban Hoffberger, but the marriage did not last more than three years, during which time Puharich and Hoffberger reportedly delivered babies in Mexico.

Shortly after their marriage, in 1970, Puharich parted ways with Lawrence, the mind-control dentist, having filed the last patent in the hearing aid series in January. There is also no further mention of Intelectron Corporation after the filing of the final patent, at which time the corporation may have been disbanded, or fallen dormant, after there was no more use for it.

However Lawrence’s extraterrestrial theme endured not only throughout the 1970s during his years of active intelligence duty, but to this very day, as is evident in the V2k throughput regarding extraterrestrial life.

In 1970, Puharich went to Tel Aviv, Israel, to train Israelis on how to use his “electrostimulation” hearing aid “device” on the clinically deaf; the tame, public version of it no doubt, where he would put an electrode on the subject’s stylomastoid foramen.

I cannot guarantee, however, that he wasn't demonstrating the more sinister (remote) version of the invention in private, to Israeli intelligence. The reason I say this, is because, as Bep Hermans pointed out, no one has ever (to this day) had their hearing restored by Puharich's invention, in Israel or elsewhere.

It was during this ambit that Puharich met Uri Geller, the world-renowned and apparently genuine telepath who also practiced telekinesis or psychokinesis (PK), the ability to influence the physical world without physical intervention (moving objects and bending spoons, etc, with the power of his mind). At the time, Geller was 25 years old and demonstrating his talent in nightclub shows to the delight and astonishment of audiences.

According to The Stargate Conspiracy, Geller had already attracted the attention of the Israeli authorities and it was an Israeli Army officer, Itzhak Bentov, who brought Geller to the attention of Puharich, who immediately saw the merit in putting Geller's psychic abilities to the test.

During one session, in which Puharich "hypnotized" Geller in order to discover where his powers originated, Geller described being three years old and "encountering a shining being" after seeing a light in the sky. Then a "voice" spoke through Geller, telling Puharich and Itzhak Bentov, who was also present, that Geller had been "programmed" on that occasion, at the age of three.

But the problem with the above scenario, as I see it, is that there's once again a "godhood" angle present here and a direct correlation between Geller and "Man's concept of God", a product of "Fancy" and a reference to unseen V2k activity going on in the background, masquerading itself as telepathy.

"The voice" went on to say that there was a major possibility of war between Israel and Egypt (Puharich's historic favorite) that could ignite World War Three. But once again I have my reservations. The possibility of conflict between regional neighbors undoubtedly existed at the time and could have been uppermost on the minds of the citizens, including Geller, in response to a hostile political climate, perhaps.

But that does not necessarily mean the advent of World War Three. Rather, it is an incendiary scenario (and a naive one, not to mention) common to (or concocted by) a V2k victim in a state of mind-control, or in a paranoid state courtesy of the V2k feedback mechanism of Warren S McCulloch, the cybernetics goat-herder.

It is furthermore a grandiose scenario (WW3) and a study in hyperbole, which routinely happens to V2k victims in the 21st century, where simple scenarios are escalated to alarming and pandemic proportions at the push of a button under a perpetrator's scaly hand.

Let's look at the parallels between Uri Geller and Dorothy Martin, for example. In Martin's case, the Eastern and Western seaboard were scheduled to be flooded, while the continents of Atlantis and Lemuria would rise up simultaneously, in a cataclysmic event.

In the case of Geller, there would be World War Three, the so-called war to end all wars (implying an apocalypse or end of days). Both scenarios were set to change the world as we know it.

Yet neither end-time prophesy happened out in the real world; only in the mind of the V2k victim, although both events can be connected, through their mind-control output similarities, to Puharich, that old “End of Days” agitator and adept mind-controller.

“The voice” urged Puharich to “take care” of Uri Geller, apportioning the task to him, in a way that would keep Puharich in the loop (similar to the Vinod incident). And in forthcoming channellings by Geller, lo and behold, “the voice” (entity or entities) explained that it was a form of conscious computer living aboard a spacecraft, called Spectra (similar to the Dorothy Martin incident).

Furthermore, after a few sessions with Geller, Puharich had the temerity to ask the entity: “Are you of the Nine Principles that once spoke through Dr Vinod?” at which time the answer provided by Geller was “Yes”. This once again perpetuated the story of The Nine.

But as you can see, by now The Nine has become progressively embarrassing within the V2k framework as well as from the historical narrative, occurring over and over again, in an increasingly unsophisticated, flimsy and not-too-interesting cover story that should have the alphabet agencies responsible and already mentioned at their lowest point ever, scrambling to control the severe damage that’s already been done.

In the meantime, further, unbelievable events took place around Geller, most discernibly the sightings of UFOs and spontaneous voices appearing on audio tape, as described by Picknett and Prince in The Stargate Conspiracy:

On his second trip, Puharich stayed in Israel for almost three months, in daily contact with Geller and bombarded with demonstrations of paranormal phenomena nearly every day. Messages from Spectra/the Nine continued, either channelled through the hypnotised Geller or appearing spontaneously on audio tapes, but in every case the tapes either erased themselves or vanished before their eyes.

Furthermore, according to some of the audio tapes that disappeared (dematerialized) before their eyes, the extraterrestrials out there had contacted Geller in the interest of helping mankind; they wanted, inter alia, to prepare the world for a mass landing on planet Earth sometime in the future.

But as I have explained before, I’m not impressed with the prospect of an alien invasion of Earth - whether benevolent or hostile - as I have experienced both variants, more especially the hostile variant, multiple times during the V2k courtesy of the electromagnetic feedback provided by the perpetrators in order to “beget” man’s concept of God (Puharich), in the form of extraterrestrials (Lawrence) as a bog-standard product of Fancy (McCulloch).

And neither am I impressed or intimidated by the prospect of audio tapes, or any tapes for that matter. I know that Puharich had an affinity for magnetic tape, using reels during V2k; Puharich and/or Lawrence, as a team, referred to themselves as “Captain Video” during the Dorothy Martin incident, more anecdotal evidence of tapes being used or more especially abused during V2k.

Thus to me, the tapes (and not to mention the extraterrestrials) were a natural extension of the overall V2k scenario experienced by Uri Geller and a common denominator implicating both Puharich and Lawrence.

You see, tapes cannot compare to the modern age. When last did we use tapes for our entertainment? It must have been in the 1980s, in the analogue age, before the advent of digital ushered in by the mainstream use of DVD technology and the like; now we have Blu Ray, Mp3s, digital streaming, Wi-Fi, cloud-based technologies and a whole host of “apps” (applications) that can be downloaded and used on mobile devices and tablets, for example.

This is an obfuscation that works well on Targeted Individuals; in one instance we can understand the current technology available in our iStore, but not vintage and outdated technology used from the 1940s to 1980s. The truth of the matter is that Puharich’s invention was old but good non-commercial technology, used by the agencies.

So, because we can’t appreciate old technology used by the likes of Puharich, we must assume that targeting is a new-fangled form of “Satellite Terrorism” or some futuristic and classified technology that surpasses vintage non-commercial-grade technology of yesterday to stalk the life out of the Targeted Individual community.

Having said that, let’s go back to the story of Uri Geller, because his story is far from over.

In fact, the events unfolding around Geller were quite spectacular. Objects would appear and disappear around him, or become invisible at times. Furthermore, objects would levitate right before his eyes; an object would rise from its station on the floor so that he could select it out of the air with his hand.

Geller himself critically reviewed the channelling of “Spectra” and not to mention the rollicking paranormal activities - such as the levitations, materializations and dematerializations that suddenly visited on him - and was, after review, deeply incredulous of the foregoing, unprecedented events.

He couldn’t believe in his rational mind the “changes” that had come over him, from being a moderately high-profile psychic, to being at the center of a maelstrom of explosive paranormal activities, as he stated in his book, My Story:

The third time [I heard the tapes] I just shook my head. Now the voice was saying that the energies were coming from a spacecraft, which it even gave a name: “Spectra.” The voice said it was from a planet thousands of light years away and that it would help us work for world peace. This to me really was a joke. Why would it have such a common Hollywood-type name? Just what was going on? Sure, I knew I could bend metal, I knew I could read minds, I knew I could do telepathy, I knew I could fix watches and stop them. But never before did things fly around, never before did objects materialise and dematerialise. Previously, in fact, metal objects did not break as they were doing now. And previously, I had heard no disembodied voices speaking on tape.

Clearly, Mr Geller was - and is - an intelligent sort and was more sophisticated, given the advent of the 1970s, than those who came before him such as Alice Bouverie and Dorothy Martin. He knew he’d experienced a significant, and not to mention diabolical, spike in paranormal activity surrounding his person after Puharich stepped in the scene.

Indeed, he must have been deeply alone at the time, being targeted by Puharich while receiving no support from other Targeted Individuals, because the year was 1971 and the term “TI” had not yet been universally adopted with a social media hashtag; and unlike current Targeted Individuals who can turn to support groups in the community for help - or at least understanding and sympathy - Geller did not have the luxury of a sympathetic ear.

He had to endure the solitude of being the only one targeted at the time, with absolutely no one to turn to for help, information or understanding.

But today, Geller (who, at the time of publishing in 2016, is around 70 years old and still alive, unlike most of the people mentioned in this book) would not be alone. Today the landscape of Puharich’s invention has, if not changed, then transmuted into a fairly commonplace traumatic scenario, where Targeted Individuals hear voices and experience aggravating paranormal activity around them, commensurate with the perpetrators’ usage of the V2k feedback mechanism and frequencies deployed by the V2k invention in a 21st century context.

I have been targeted many, many times by paranormal activity, and I’m afraid it made me yawn in the end. At first, I was kind of freaked out by the poltergeist stuff that kept on happening around my house and family, but, in the end, it was just a continuation of all (the crap) that had transpired over many years of targeting; anomalous occurrences that I had come to expect from the V2k experience.

It takes a V2k victim to appreciate the nonsense that goes along with V2k. For around a year, I experienced moderate (some would say high) levels of paranormal or poltergeist activity in my home. There would be a lot of knocking on the walls, especially in electromagnetically charged areas, such as the sitting room where we have electrical appliances. The knocking would occur roughly between the flat screen television and the satellite dish (yawn) that’s mounted on an upstairs balcony.

One night there was ceaseless, almost frantic knocking on the wall that carried on for well over a minute. The following day, my son drove his arm through a window pane in a horrific accident and had to be rushed to the ER for emergency medical treatment, where the doctor and nurses looked upon his injury with utmost consternation.

During the same, one-year timeframe, my son was also arrested by police and forced to spend an unpleasant weekend in a holding cell. And one time he was mugged on the street, sustaining a stab wound in his leg that requiring another trip to the ER, in a never-ending cycle of accident and harassment.

I knew these occurrences were related to the V2k and such occurrences have since ceased, or at least de-escalated in severity to a satisfactory level. But at the time, other things were also happening. One night I was lying in bed, just about to fall asleep, when I heard the sound of something rolling on the roof. It was already late, around 11pm and everyone else in the household was asleep. Furthermore, there is no access to the roof whatsoever, so I knew there was no one on the roof.

Yet, it sounded like a bowling ball, or more precisely, a can, such as a large can of preserves - peaches, perhaps - rolling on the roof. At another time, in the middle of the night, there was the sound of a door opening, at which time there were footsteps in the hallway as someone made their way to the bathroom to relieve themselves. But the sound faded out mid-action in a typical haunting/poltergeist manifestation.

But there was something that occurred three or four times throughout my targeting that was truly paranormal. In these instances, objects would materialize in my home or teleport themselves within my home. I'll not elaborate on these transported items; I'll just say that, at the time, these events were on par with the apparition cat experience; and I've witnessed all three possible eventualities of V2k, namely teleportation, materialization and manifestation, in my home and yard and I can recount robust examples of these.

Uri Geller was, in a sense, an early prototype of a Targeted Individual, who experienced a great deal of paranormal activity. And although Targeted Individuals of the current day don't necessarily experience high levels of paranormal activity, they do experience some of it, at the discretion of their perpetrators, consistent with the parameters of the invention.

But the greatest example of Puharich's talents, as a spiritual adept with a militaristic approach to the paranormal, was to be found in an incident that took place during his tenure at his Ossining estate on the Hudson River, around 40 miles from New York City, as the following story will explain.

It's a story that appears in Geller's book, My Story, which can be found on his website, Urigeller.com. Geller himself asks the reader to "suspend belief" as he himself has had to do in the telling. The incident happened on Friday, 9 November 1973, late in the afternoon. Geller starts the story by saying:

There is no way I can tell this story without having it sound like science fiction. There is nothing I can do about that. Because it is so hard even for me to believe what happened, I have thought a long time about whether or not I should include it in this book. And yet what happened, happened.

That Friday evening, Geller, who had relocated to New York City from Tel Aviv in August 1972 and who was very much in contact with Puharich, was making his way home on foot, trying to beat the rush because he had a date with a girl at a city hotel and he still needed to shower and change into his eveningwear.

At the same time, a mutual female acquaintance of Geller and Puharich, Solveig Clark, was travelling on a train, en route from New York City to Ossining in an approximate hour-long journey, where she was scheduled to arrive at 7.04pm, after which Puharich would collect her from the station.

It was around 6pm, or a few minutes after, that Puharich was ostensibly watching the news on television in Ossining, waiting for Solveig Clark to arrive. Back in Manhattan, Geller, who did not want to be late for his date, broke into a jog about one block away from his apartment that was situated East of Second Avenue.

Upon nearing his apartment, Geller suddenly had the feeling that he was "running backwards" for a few steps. The next moment he was "in the air" where he momentarily witnessed the "pavement passing underfoot". He had the sensation of "being sucked upwards", at which time he closed his eyes.

When he opened his eyes again, Geller was being propelled through the air towards a porch screen. He flew over the top of a rhododendron bush and crashed through the screen onto a porch, toppling and breaking a glass table. But what shocked Geller the most was the fact that he recognized the porch and table, because he had been there many times before. It was Puharich's house, in Ossining.

One minute he had been on the East Side of Manhattan and the next, around 40 miles away, crashing through the porch screen at Puharich's in the best entrance ever made. The situation must have been somewhat uncomfortable and bizarre after that, I would say, as Geller then accompanied Puharich in a car to the Ossining station to pick up Solveig Clark, who, ironically, had just arrived from Manhattan the old fashioned way, in a passenger coach towed by a locomotive!

The previous year, in August 1972, Geller, after arriving in the United States and at the request of Puharich, had reluctantly agreed to partake in experimentation at the Stanford Research Institute, conducted by Russell Targ, a specialist in lasers and plasma research and Dr Harold Puthoff, a specialist in quantum physics.

Both of these disciplines encompassed Puharich's field of interest, one being plasma research, of which perpetrators have already been found guilty in my own Kangaroo court of using R-PECVD on targets, as well as the coming of age of the paranormal/quantum physics, after which research Puharich flashily showed Geller the wonders of levitation and the merits of materialization/dematerialization and then delivered him, lock, stock and barrel, in a grandiose act of teleportation, directly to his own house in Ossining.

You see, what we have here, in the 21st century, is a ludicrous - and not to mention intentional and malicious - cover-up of what is indeed possible. We are told, over and over again, that V2k does not exist; that it is the product of an unstable, inconstant mind, a schizophrenic mind; that we are delusional and thus in need of counselling in a psychiatric setting and medications prescribed by a psychiatrist.

Furthermore, Targeted Individuals have the propensity to become overzealous at times in response to this, because they absolutely know they are not schizophrenic, leading to further conflict and subsequent punitive measures being levelled against them by a mainstream, ignorant majority.

Yet, there is clear anecdotal evidence of not only V2k but teleportation - the very stuff of quantum physics - being directly connected to Puharich, the inventor of V2k himself, in the latter years of his research and experimentation, and moreover being used on Geller, an early Targeted Individual.

And if you were wondering whether the teleportation of Geller was an isolated incident, it was not. Puharich teleported others into his home, as we shall see later, in another, equally shocking story.

But in the meantime, Puharich had opened the door to derision and condemnation, according to Bep Hermans' biography, when "the voice" that spoke on the many tapes generated during the Uri Geller incident said that they could only speak to him (Puharich) through the power of Uri Geller on the tape recorder, and that is was "a shame" that they could not "contact such a brilliant mind directly".

According to The Stargate Conspiracy, In October, 1973, Uri Geller appeared on The David Dimbleby Show on British television and became an overnight psychic sensation, at which time he distanced himself considerably from Puharich - and The Nine - refusing to implicate himself in Puharich's story any further.

And in 1974, Puharich published his book on Geller, titled Uri (available on Geller's website). After the book was published, the scientific community made disparaging remarks about Puharich such as "A good mind gone off at a tangent" and "A classic case of omnipotence fantasy".

And although I love these negative comments and take much glee from them, they were clearly an early attempt to take aim at Puharich, to take a run at him, in the same way that Terry L Milner, Picknett and Prince and now, I, have done.

But in fact, Puharich was as "omnipotent" as he claimed. His technology was omnipotent (feedback in social systems) and he clearly boasted about it to the prevailing scientific community, who took umbrage to his claims and tried to scuttle him in a token, ideological resistance, albeit not very effectively, due, once again, to a lack of evidence.

At least Geller had the strength to distance himself from Puharich, aided, fortunately, by his newfound psychic stardom in the United States and the financial freedom that no doubt came along with it, thus forcing Puharich to stop pursuing Geller (like a persistent, but unwanted admirer, I'd say) and leave him alone to live his life.

Before parting ways with Puharich, Spectra, the intelligent entity aboard Uri Geller's supposed spaceship, began to make reference to another extraterrestrial race, called "somewhat unfortunately" according to Picknett and Prince, Hoova, and it wasn't long after that, that Geller left Puharich's improper scene behind him in his own best interest.

I'm really not surprised at the Hoova reference, as J Edgar Hoover, founder of the mischievous FBI who had died the previous year in 1972, was, according to some contemporary biographers and filmmakers - the most famous of these being actor-turned-director Clint Eastwood who directed a movie called J Edgar - a mama's boy and closet gay who waged a public vendetta against homosexuals and kept dossiers on the sex lives of congressmen and presidents, while having numerous affairs with men in secret, thereby engaging in excruciating double standards.

Puharich's invention is used by anti-gay perpetrators because the invention has built-in anti-gay features and sentiment, incorporated by Puharich, the original perpetrator. But my suspicion is that Puharich was bisexual, that he was married several times but harbored a parallel, private interest in young men and Uri Geller, in particular.

During an interview in 1996 after Puharich's death, Geller stated that the experimentation (although he never used the word) that Puharich had done on him was financed by the American Defence Department (the ADD, or Attention Deficit Department).

Geller, a reliable and lively witness, furthermore found The Nine "childish and ultimately unimpressive" - similar to my own sentiment on V2k and McCulloch's childish feedback - saying of them in a landmark utterance made in August 1972: "I think somebody is playing games with us. Perhaps they are a civilization of clowns."

But as Picknett and Prince so aptly point out in their book, The Stargate Conspiracy, who knows which US government clowns (Bozos) were involved? Which alphabet agencies were implicated in this national security fiasco of massive, global proportion?

Was it the Central Idiots Agency (CIA), the Federal Bureau of Idiots (FBI), or the Attention Deficit Department (ADD)? I'm afraid I can't answer that, except to say that "intelligence, investigation and American defence" are clearly not in their middle names.

The Human "Transceivers": Phyllis Schlemmer and Bobby Horne

Long before Geller left the scene, Puharich had already created an association with another psychic by the name of Phyllis Schlemmer. Puharich met Schlemmer at a conference in the late 1960s, after which they were in regular contact. In 1969, Schlemmer founded the Psychic Center of Florida, an organization that sought to develop psychic students to their fullest potential (similar to Eileen Garrett, many years earlier).

At the time, Schlemmer's foremost spirit guide was "Dr Fiske", no doubt a genuine and traditional spiritual entity who interacted with Schlemmer in a mediumistic fashion. With the guidance of Dr Fiske, Schlemmer had made a name for herself by working for the police and mining companies. She even had her own television show, where she showcased her psychic abilities.

But in 1970, all of that changed. After she met Puharich, a new entity, simply called "Tom", came into the story, replacing "Dr Fiske" as the entity of choice. At first Schlemmer thought the entity was her dead grandfather, Thomas, who died when she was five. This is similar to the Dorothy Martin incident, in which Martin initially thought the entity that spoke to her was her dead father. However in both instances, the channelled entity turned out to be extraterrestrial in origin.

Then, according to The Stargate Conspiracy, Schlemmer "turned her back on" (abandoned) her traditional mediumistic communion with the dead (those who had "crossed over") and Dr Fiske in 1974, in order to channel extraterrestrials only, such as "Tom", who later revealed himself as another spokesman for The Nine.

This brings to at least four the amount of persons who were in communication with The Nine. The first of these were Vinod and Stone in the 1950s, followed, after a hiatus, by Geller and Schlemmer in the 1970s and predictably, more such channellers as time went by.

In January 1974, a cook from Daytona Beach, called Bobby Horne (not his real name), had enrolled at Schlemmer's Psychic Center of Florida in the interest of furthering his healing abilities, because he was a psychic healer.

Schlemmer "recommended" Horne as a "potential subject for further study" and according to The Stargate Conspiracy it was not to be "a fortuitous recommendation" for Bobby Horne. Puharich travelled to Miami to meet Horne, who, upon being hypnotized, started channelling an extraterrestrial entity called "Corean". Further sessions followed in which Horne channelled more of Corean, replacing Geller as the new "Chosen One" at the center of the circle.

It was around April of 1974 that Sir John Whitmore, a wealthy, well-educated aristocrat from a British family, who was also a business tycoon and racing driver, joined the group comprising Puharich, Schlemmer and Horne. He was followed, in due course, by another channeller, Peter Hurtak (not to be confused with Peter Hurkos), from California, who also claimed "personal contact" with extraterrestrials.

But in the meantime, The Nine, through their spokesman Corean and channeller Horne told Puharich, Schlemmer and Whitmore that they, as a trio, had been “chosen for a special mission” and that they were to spread the word of an impending return of extraterrestrials to planet Earth.

But this, to me, is nothing more than a study in gross naiveté or gross manipulation (or a combination of both). If you will recall, from not too much earlier in this book, that Geller, too, during his channelling of “Spectra”, tried to prepare the world for a mass landing of extraterrestrials.

This brings to two the amount of persons (Geller and Horne) who predicted a benign alien invasion in the guise of aid to a faltering world, and five, the amount of persons who channelled The Nine, the latest being Bobby Horne, who should have stuck to his day job of flipping burgers in Daytona Beach, had he only but known that Puharich was actually a mind-controlling charlatan.

Thereafter Puharich, Horne, Schlemmer and Whitmore bounced between the United States and Britain, no doubt at the expense of Whitmore the convert, because he was wealthy, with Horne “channelling” the story of the mass landing of extraterrestrials.

But something started going wrong with Bobby Horne. According to The Stargate Conspiracy, he was coming under “increasing pressure” from The Nine and began to make excuses in order to not make an appearance. He even became suicidal and determined to bow out of the scenario.

Later, John Whitmore loftily dismissed Horne as showing “signs of instability”. But, as a 21st century Targeted Individual, I can shed light on this scenario. Bobby Horne was showing typical signs of becoming a dysfunctional V2k victim, wanting to commit suicide either because he was compelled to attempt to do so, or more likely because the V2k was extremely unpleasant, as it is to this very day.

According to The Stargate Conspiracy, The Nine decided to let him (Horne) go, which is a luxury that all Targeted Individuals of the current century do not have. In the 21st century, V2k victims are not allowed to leave the scenario.

As long as Targeted Individuals still have “k” attached to their facial and cranial nervous system, no one is permitted to leave V2k, and perpetrators make no concessions in regard to their religious application of feedback in biological systems.

But, as it turns out, Puharich (The Nine) decided to let Horne go, not in his own best interest as you can imagine, but in the interest of appointing Phyllis Schlemmer as the “transceiver” for communications received from “Tom”, fourth spokesman of The Nine.

But, whether this was because Puharich was already an older man by then (around 56 years old and perhaps not as tight on secrecy as he was before) or for another reason entirely, this is when the wheels came off the project; the mask “slipped” off of the puppet, so to speak.

You see, the point is that Puharich referred to Schlemmer as a “transceiver”. In so doing, he let the proverbial cat out of the bag. The word “transceiver” is of extreme significance to the Targeted Individual community and by calling Schlemmer a transceiver Puharich was essentially acknowledging and admitting that she was a V2k/Moonstruck victim.

Let me refresh your memory, lest you have forgotten what I wrote at the beginning of this book, with reference to the Major Electromagnetic Mind-Control Projects entry on Project Moonstruck, filed in 1952, that states the following:

Project Moonstruck, 1952, CIA:

Electronic implants in brain and teeth

Targeting: Long range

Implanted during surgery or surreptitiously during abduction

Frequency range: HF - ELF transceiver implants

Purpose: Tracking, mind and behavior control, conditioning, programming, covert operations

Functional Basis: Electronic Stimulation of the Brain, E.S.B.

As you can see from the italicized portion in the entry, the grievous word “transceiver” is used in the description of Project Moonstruck, and Puharich dared to utter the word “transceiver” to Schlemmer, either directly or through the feedback.

Let us now realize the meaning of the word “transceiver”, through the use of a traditional dictionary, that states:

A device that can both transmit and receive communications, in particular a combined radio transmitter and receiver.

Or, in another definition of the word:

A transceiver is a device comprising both a transmitter and a receiver which are combined and share common circuitry or a single housing. When no circuitry is common between transmit and receive functions, the device is a transmitter-receiver. The term originated in the early 1920s. Similar devices include transponders, transverters, and repeaters.

Now, did anybody miss the word “implants” after the word “transceiver” in the Project Moonstruck entry?

It’s clear that Phyllis Schlemmer was implanted with transceiver (solid-state) material (“k”) so that she could “both transmit and receive communications [like] a combined radio transmitter and receiver”: a 1970s version of a 21st century Radiohead (namely you and me: “Targeted Individuals”, victims of “Electronic Harassment” and “EH/OS”).

Lab Nine and the Latter Portion of Puharich’s Professional Life

It was during the early to mid-1970s that a number of famous people were involved with Puharich’s group. Puharich, ever the copywriter, had rebranded his operation “Lab Nine” to be more in line with current standards of sophistication, and continued to operate (his V2k front and scam) out of his estate in Ossining and a nearby house on Hawkes Avenue purchased by John Whitmore.

One of these people was author Lyall Watson, a South African botanist, zoologist and successful paranormal writer who had just published a best-selling book called Supernature.

According to The Stargate Conspiracy, Watson was a sitter at many of Schlemmer’s channelling sessions that showcased The Nine. Tom, speaking through Schlemmer then advised that they wanted Watson to be a joint channeller and to write their biography. But Watson declined to either write the book or become further involved, at which time he was expelled from the group.

Picknett and Prince claim that “Tom” the extraterrestrial entity purged all non-believers from the group, or, moreover, those who were likely to express their reservations or ask uncomfortable questions about the nature of The Nine.

In the meantime, there was more evidence of “man’s concept of God” going on at Ossining. For example, during one channelling session Tom announced that Puharich’s house was being visited by angels, at which time Puharich, Schlemmer and Whitmore raced down the stairs and outside, joyously shouting “they’re here, they’re here”, much to the derision of Bep Hermans, who was visiting the estate at the time.

Of course there were no angels to be seen outside, circling above the house. But the concept is disturbingly similar to the one experienced by Dorothy Martin and one or two of my own V2k incidents in which I experienced “man’s concept of God” during the feedback in the form of angel visitations (I was “visited” by an entity called Archangel Muriel, a female entity of the angelic realm).

If you will recall, Dorothy Martin and her group waited in the kitchen for the series of spaceship landings and would go outside at the appointed hour, into the garden to witness the landings, which never took place, because she was in a state of V2k mind-control, courtesy of Puharich and Lawrence.

On 16 October, 1974, Tom of The Nine announced that there was a new potential for war in the Middle East and that the trio comprising Puharich, Schlemmer and Whitmore were to go to a number of locations to meditate for peace. Their itinerary would take them to places like Helsinki, Warsaw, Moscow and Tehran.

The Stargate Conspiracy states that, on one trip, the group travelled from Helsinki to Warsaw, Poland, where Puharich set up a radio receiver in the interest of contacting Tom, thereby making them look like Cold War-era spies. Picknett and Prince speculated, quite astutely, that the presence of the radio receiver was somewhat of a slur on Schlemmer’s talents as a spiritual medium.

You see, due to the distance involved, Puharich possibly needed to augment (amplify) Schlemmer’s transceiver abilities by carrying a receiver with him all over Europe, again proving, at least anecdotally, that Schlemmer was a V2k victim.

Indeed, Puharich, Schlemmer and Whitmore were an odd or unlikely trio as they travelled together from one place to another. The trips were fraught with infighting and disagreements.

On a fashion level, Puharich and Whitmore complained that Schlemmer looked like a middle-aged American tourist toting three suitcases, while Schlemmer accused Whitmore of looking like a hippie in a tracksuit. Both Schlemmer and Whitmore were furthermore irritated with Puharich for lugging a whole lot of gadgets, such as photographic and recording equipment with him, wherever he went.

By March 1975, the trio reconvened at Ossining, but according to Bep Hermans’ biography, the atmosphere in the house was never quite the same. After one more trip, in which the trio went to Israel, Schlemmer and Whitmore began to fade into the background, eventually transferring their operations to Israel.

But first Puharich and Whitmore commissioned the writing of a book about the group titled Briefings for the Landing on Planet Earth, written by British author Stuart Holroyd, who, according to The Stargate Conspiracy, experienced poltergeist disturbances at his house while listening to the Schlemmer channelling tapes in order to write the book.

And during the early 1990s, Phyllis Schlemmer, who was a major disciple of The Nine also wrote a book mostly containing the channelled messages from Tom, called The Only Planet of Choice.

I, for one, am not interested in these books, because they chronicle nothing more than empty, rambling feedback of a V2k victim. Tom the extraterrestrial claimed that he was “limited to the words and concepts” in the transceiver’s mind, which, if not a hundred percent accurate, is true enough. Books such as these - studies in the begetting of Fancy - have become the basis of the New Age movement, showcasing the power of belief systems.

Yet, the equally great - if not greater - concept of V2k mind-control, has been effectively hidden in the melee of extraterrestrial contact, which just goes to prove that the greater the lie, the more likely people are to believe it. And Puharich was a past-master at lying and weaving intricate tales in order to obfuscate the appalling truth.

It’s in fact overdue that the American government sobers up and realizes that bona fide mind-control - not the stuff of rumours, legends and schizophrenic minds - has been going on for almost 70 years, destabilizing not only the citizens, but the nation as a whole. Indeed they must realize that mind-control has been exported to other nations too, so that we now have a worldwide epidemic that has spiralled out of control.

The Stargate Conspiracy goes on to highlight more people - transceivers - who came into contact with Puharich, with varying outcomes. Picknett and Prince mention an “influential channeller”, an Englishwoman named Jenny O’Connor, who, after being introduced by Whitmore to the prestigious Esalen Institute of California, gave talks in which The Nine spoke through her.

Jenny Connor was the sixth person to “channel” The Nine and she was not to be the last. In 1976, two people approached Puharich at Ossining after reading his book Uri. They were Don Elkins, a former airline pilot and devotee of UFOs and extraterrestrial contact and Carla Rueckert, an associate with whom he had founded a group called L/L Research in the interest of investigating such phenomena.

First Elkins and Rueckert accompanied Puharich to Mexico in 1977 and 1978 to study a female psychic healer, Pachita. After that, Carla Rueckert started channelling another messenger of The Nine, named Ra, an obviously foolish Egyptian god puppet, bringing to seven the amount of persons who channelled The Nine.

Authors Picknett and Prince made fun of one of the channelling sessions by Carla Rueckert in 1981 in which Ra said:

In number, the Council that sits in constant session, though varying in its members of balancing, which takes place, what you would call irregularly, is nine. That is the Session Council. To back up this Council, there are twenty-four entities which offer their services as requested. These entities faithfully watch and have been called Guardians.

The reason for the authors' derision is that the entity Ra showed a "godlike disdain" of English grammar and syntax, etc, consistent - although unwittingly so - with the "gobbledegook" nature of feedback that I have mentioned before.

In other words, Puharich, in the context of being a mind-controlling puppet master, had not been too-too selective at the time of "appointing" Carla Rueckert as his latest "transceiver", as Rueckert was clearly not the most literate of individuals, having had a poorer grasp of the English language.

Interestingly enough, Don Elkins, ex-airline pilot and Rueckert's partner, committed suicide in 1984, at which time the extraterrestrial communications simply ended. This leads me to believe that possibly Elkins - and not Rueckert - was the primary V2k victim and that Puharich was conducting an experiment in environmental mind-control (feedback in social systems).

The point remains that Elkins committed suicide, consistent with being a V2k victim, bringing to two the amount of suicide victims, namely Puharich's first wife, Virginia and Elkins, with an additional suicide attempt by Bobby Horne.

Furthermore, Rueckert used the word "Guardians" to describe the extraterrestrials. I'm afraid, once again, that the word has already been used in the context of V2k, or suspected V2k, earlier in this book. Dorothy Martin's entity Sananda and his assistant from planet Clarion were also described as "Guardians", bringing to two the number of V2k victims who uttered the word during their channelling (feedback) sessions, namely Carla Rueckert and Dorothy Martin.

Sadly, Puharich was still all about V2k when he appointed a further channeller, Mark Probert, who channelled The Nine as his eighth channeller/V2k victim.

Deep Space Nine

There is a need to talk briefly about the culture that went along with Puharich's work and influence on society, especially the societal norms of the eighties and nineties, and to a lesser extent, the norms of the 21st century.

It was around 1974 that Puharich met Gene Roddenberry, creator of the Star Trek franchise. Roddenberry, like author Lyall Watson, was a sitter during the Phyllis Schlemmer channelling sessions. According to The Stargate Conspiracy, his involvement in Puharich's scene started several years after the original Star Trek series aired and ended on television, and he was possibly eager to have his imagination inspired, so that he could write more Star Trek movies and series.

It seems like Puharich and Roddenberry really enjoyed each other's company, hit it off, so to speak. It's my opinion that Puharich bounced a lot of concepts off of Roddenberry, who not only absorbed the concepts like a sponge, but reciprocated by incorporating some of them into future Star Trek outings.

The Stargate Conspiracy contends that The Nine influenced Star Trek: The Motion Picture (released in 1979), Star Trek: The Next Generation, and, quite obviously Deep Space Nine, the television series, in which a character by the name of Vinod appeared in one of the episodes.

I'm completely appalled by the inclusion of mind-control in the popular media such as Star Trek. It stands to reason that the legions of Star Trek fans - Trekkies, as they are called - are blissfully unaware of the origins of some of the dodgier ideologies contained within Star Trek; being the domain of Puharich and the very premise of mind-control.

But I can give further insight into Puharich's concepts that appeared in Star Trek. You see, there are two concepts within the Star Trek franchise that are deeply reminiscent (redolent) of Puharich's fragrant research into not only V2k but quantum physics, practiced by himself and associates Targ and Puthoff on Uri Geller and the like.

The first of these is teleportation. In Star Trek, we have become familiar with the teleportation of Captain James T Kirk and other officials, who teleported at will between planets and the spaceship or mother ship called USS Enterprise. There was even a jocular, or triumphant, moment in the scenario in which the teleported would predictably say "Beam me up, Scotty!" to chief engineer Montgomery "Scotty" Scott, after partaking in a successful incursion or skirmish on an alien or hostile planet; uttering Star Trek's legendary catchphrase to the delight of appreciative audiences worldwide.

But as we can see from the Geller incident, teleportation was - and is - indeed a reality, using methodologies that incorporate paranormal-copied frequencies, produced by an electromagnetic field generator, Tesla Coil or the like. And being a V2k victim, I unfortunately understand only too well the vista of the paranormal cloning technology that's been used on me and other Targeted Individuals, recipients of the moonstruck stroke of genius.

The second concept in the Star Trek franchise is perhaps familiar and no less intimidating than the first. It has to do with the so-called "Borg Collective", a group of unattractive and frightening cyborgs featured in the Star Trek franchise that go about "assimilating" biological life-forms into their mechanical/technological hive or collective while uttering the chilling phrase, "Resistance is futile", to prospective conquests. It is based almost entirely on the principle of V2k, in which V2k has been impossible to resist.

I can almost imagine Puharich speaking to Roddenberry in the mid-70s, giving him the theoretical overview of V2k in order for Roddenberry to immortalize V2k and the legend of it into the very social fabric of the 80s and 90s.

According to the definitive web entry and wisdom on the Borg Collective, the following is written online:

The Borg Collective was the term used to define the collective intelligence comprising all members linked together into a hive mind via subspace transceivers and calling themselves the Borg. It was the de facto governing power, as the term was considered by individuals, over all Borg civilization.

But I emphatically call your attention to the fact that the word "transceivers" is used once again, this time to describe an "individual" that ends up being "assimilated" into the hive-like mentality of the Borg. It's a precognitive indictment on the term Targeted “Individual” that’s used so commonly today; perhaps obtained from a reliable remote-viewing session into the future conducted by Joe Lawrence.

Puharich actively promoted the unethical, though supposedly fictional, concept to Roddenberry and Roddenberry unwittingly ran with it in his films, innocently or commercially anticipating that it could be a hot-selling story (critically-acclaimed or a box-office success if at all possible).

Certainly the Borg is a glamorization of V2k mind-control that is forever immortalized in Hollywood, in the interest of discrediting real mind-control victims - such as those of us alive and trying to breathe in the 21st century - in a calculated and lethal misdirection of the facts by Puharich, author of nightmares.

I don’t often speak about myself, because I believe that doing so could be counterproductive. But I would like to make an account here, of the most atrocious interaction I’ve had with a family member during my tenure as a V2k victim.

This family member, a male, is a mathematical genius. To give you a background, he works for a commercial company that has ties to governments worldwide and contracts with these to produce military- or intelligence-grade defence systems. In other words, he is not an intellectual lightweight and has the necessary security clearance to work on such projects.

Yet the intellectual is also a Star Trek fan - a Trekkie. So much so, that he even named his favorite cat Spock, in honor of the very popular half-human, half-Vulcan character in the Star Trek franchise, Mr Spock.

But when I claimed to be a V2k victim, this so-called genius countered that I should furnish proof of such. He demanded that proof be provided of this incredulous claim. So, I was just wondering what kind of proof would satisfy this criterion; physical proof, perhaps?

One cannot simply provide physical proof of an esoteric crime that’s taking place, thereby calling into question his intellect. And to add insult to injury, he’s a Trekkie, glomming on the Star Trek fan fiction whilst dismissing a real Targeted Individual who’s in the family’s midst courtesy of Puharich, that old V2k mind-controlling villain and Gene Roddenberry’s actual muse.

Make no mistake that I am at loggerheads with this person, as well as many others, whose ignorance precedes them and whose thoughtlessness has been duly noted, while I struggled relentlessly against the bonds of the “k” and the daily torture routine commensurate with being a real V2k victim in the real world and a real, live version of the Borg, a concept seen by billions of people on just about every television set in the world.

And there is one last thing that I can say about the Borg. There is one further parallel between the Borg and Targeted Individuals that I can think of. It concerns Star Trek: The Next Generation, in which the commander of the USS Enterprise, Jean-Luc Picard, is the first person ever to escape the Borg Collective after being assimilated.

In the Wikipedia entry for Jean-Luc Picard, it states:

The third season finale, "The Best of Both Worlds, Part I", depicts Picard being assimilated by the Borg... Picard's assimilation and recovery are a critical point in the character's development, and provided back-story for the film Star Trek: First Contact... It is later revealed... that parts of Borg machinery were removed from inside Picard, but that he retains traumatic memories and lingering neurological after-effects of assimilation.

What is interesting about this is that I, too, am the first person to remove myself almost entirely from the targeting; the first to identify and remove the “k” and feedback mechanism of Roddenberry’s muse. This will forever equate me with Captain Picard’s escape from the unstoppable, fictional Borg in a move that proves that truth is indeed stranger than fiction.

The Turkey Farm Children and the End of Puharich’s Career

For some reason that I may never fully comprehend, Puharich decided that he was going to spend time mentoring children and teenagers who appeared to have psychic abilities.

He was interested in children who could do things like bend metal objects and other children, who I’m sure had no particular psychic abilities and talents, but could be used as research “participants”.

It was during the summer of 1975 that Puharich assembled around 20 children at his estate in Ossining, ranging in age from nine to late teens. They were called “Gellerlings” or “Space Kids” and Puharich’s Ossining estate, or its annexure in Hawkes Avenue, forthwith became known by its more sinister name, the Turkey Farm, presumably because there were turkeys roaming the yard, but not necessarily so.

It was during this time in Puharich’s history that he made a number of startling claims about the children. He claimed that they received messages from aliens. He claimed that the Space Kids were able to materialize objects such as trees and that six of the children had arrived at his ranch estate by teleportation. One of the teens claimed that he was made to practice remote viewing in the interest of viewing political targets such as the Kremlin and the White House.

But in 1978, Puharich’s estate mysteriously burned down in a suspected arson attack. One suspect in the execution of the arson was one of the Space Kids, who claimed that aliens were harassing him. But Puharich claimed otherwise, stating that the CIA was behind the unprecedented attack on him.

Puharich then disappeared, presumably by going to Mexico with his two new friends, Don Elkins, the former airline pilot who later committed suicide, and Carla Rueckert, the under-performing channeller who channelled The Nine until Elkins killed himself, to study the works of Pachita, the psychic healer.

According to The Stargate Conspiracy, when Puharich returned in 1980, he appeared to have had no further contact with The Nine, or the Council of Nine and the most notable thing he did after that, was to up and die fifteen years later in 1995 after falling down a flight of stairs.

But I would like to rewind this portion of the story and start from the beginning, in order to set a few things straight.

It stands to reason that some - if not all - of the Turkey Farm Children were V2k victims and that Puharich was experimenting on them. He clearly assembled them so that he could perform experimentation in V2k, materialization/dematerialization and teleportation.

Consider Puharich's own claims that the children received messages from aliens. This is consistent with the adult victims discussed in this book who were early experimental V2k victims, from the first two, more rudimental victims at Bellevue, to Carla Rueckert and Mark Probert, the latest victims.

The teenager who was ostensibly responsible for the arson attack claimed to be harassed by aliens. This is consistent once again with the adult victims in this book and also contemporary Targeted Individuals, who have run-ins with aliens, angels, demons and the like - generally man's concept of God - during the begetting of Fancy by means of feedback.

And if this teenager indeed razed the farm to the ground, I personally commend him for doing so and believe he deserves a congressional medal of honor for his bold action. He must have known, somewhere in his consciousness, that his so-called harassment by aliens was the work of Puharich.

He perhaps realized that, by burning down the ranch, he could achieve an end to his harassment. If only we, as adults, could be so brave, or as lucky, as this glorious teenager who fought back! If there ever is an "alien invasion", I want him on my team.

But there was certainly a hidden angle to the story. You see, it looks to me like the CIA, by that time, had had enough of Puharich. They knew that Puharich was practicing Project Moonstruck from his compound and that he was a menace to society. And even though I don't believe the CIA was squeaky-clean, they had taken umbrage to Puharich's activities.

First of all, they could have been angry at his use of children in his experimentation. If there was anyone in the CIA at the time with an ounce of decency, this would have been the case. But it is more likely that Puharich was seen as slipping (getting sloppy) in his liberal use of classified information. Fairly recently he had started calling his channellers "transceivers" in accordance with the entry on Project Moonstruck (an intelligence no-no).

In addition to being unable to give up the V2k in the interest of it remaining in the least classified or confidential, Puharich was displaying an even greater security malpractice. He was experimenting with, and actively demonstrating, materializations and teleportations, using kiddies to showcase his advanced capabilities; getting "all up" in the CIA's face, so to speak.

In review, it's clear that there was a major feud going on between Puharich and the CIA at the time. Puharich then had one of his Space Kids remote-view the Kremlin, the Whitehouse and the Pentagon, in a provocative move that was either a threat to national security and international relations, or in the calculated spirit of making fun of the CIA (or both).

Puharich even called the CIA agents “turkeys” (hence the name Turkey Farm) and they responded by making no less than four assassination attempts against his life, according to Puharich himself, who was anxious to pass himself off as the victim in the scenario.

So Puharich skipped town, fleeing to Mexico with Elkins and Rueckert in tow, ostensibly to study Pachita, the psychic surgeon. But I wonder whether Puharich didn’t make a deal with the CIA, while in Mexico, agreeing to step down and cease any further V2k and teleportation practices, experimentation and activities.

The CIA perhaps agreed to let the final V2k victim, Carla Rueckert’s “channelling” run its course, which it did until 1984, at which time Elkins unfortunately had to die in a “suicide”, in order to bring Puharich’s final V2k chapter to an end.

But the fact of the matter - and something that everybody overlooks, including esteemed authors Picknett and Prince, of The Stargate Conspiracy - is that the CIA was actually being tasked with forcing Puharich into retirement.

Puharich, who had been working for the American government in a civilian capacity for decades, was in actual fact being served his retirement notice by the CIA, who needed to bring the maverick and somewhat unruly inventor under control, because it was about time to quash the physical research that Puharich had been unable to give up at his own recognisance.

You see, Puharich was born in 1918 and the CIA was deployed to end his years of service to the State, like a lowly government employee, in 1978, at the universal retirement age of 60. The whole Turkey Farm scenario was thus Puharich’s ugly swan song, the clarion call for his retirement from active duty and his recall to heel, in which his security clearance was summarily revoked. Puharich wisely chose to retire rather than die.

The Aftermath of Puharich’s Career and the End of The Nine

After Puharich retired, it was by no means the end of him, as he continued to give lectures about his invention in the 1980s, about which I will talk at the end of this chapter. But in the meantime, I’d like to mention the melee of interconnected authors and books that were written on the subject of The Nine, or more specifically, books that were based on the transcripts of channelling sessions, featuring all the more recent spokesmen of The Nine.

As already mentioned, in 1993, Phyllis Schlemmer published The Only Planet of Choice: Essential Briefings from Deep Space, an almost 400-page book featuring the rhetoric of Tom the extraterrestrial since 1974, which became a New Age bestseller at the expense of an unsuspecting public.

The book featured a “front-cover endorsement” by James Hurtak, who had his own role to play in the story. While Puharich, Sir John Whitmore and Phyllis Schlemmer toured Europe and the Middle East in the mid-70s, Hurtak was considered the second-in-command at Lab Nine, back in the United States. Hurtak channelled his own set of extraterrestrials and had written a popular book called The Keys of Enoch, published in June 1987, which also features material about the Council of Nine.

Another sitter who was present at the channellings of Phyllis Schlemmer was a writer by the name of David Percy. Percy, along with his co-author, David Myers, wrote a novel based on principles similar to the ones found in The Keys of Enoch, called Two-Thirds, also published in 1993. In fact, David Myers also channelled Tom, Schlemmer's extraterrestrial, in a highly unlikely coincidence; the more likely explanation being that both Percy and Myers were at some time present in Puharich's house.

And although, according to The Stargate Conspiracy, the book Two-Thirds does not mention The Nine by name, it also contains an unorthodox mix of extraterrestrial and Egyptian blended content, talking about races of beings called "Alteans" and "Essenes" and how they built the Great Pyramid of Giza and the Sphinx at Giza (yawn).

The Stargate Conspiracy notes the following about Two-Thirds:

The whole book was channelled from the Nine by David Myers, who clairaudiently hears Tom's voice in his head, rather than channelling in an altered state, like Bobby Horne or Phyllis Schlemmer.

Specifically noting that:

Hearing voices and speaking the words of extraterrestrials is not an activity that most people admire and respect...

Indeed, Picknett and Prince would be right about all of that, considering that David Percy went to Puharich's house in the late 1970s, possibly accompanied by David Myers, into the lion's den so to speak, where we know from experience that Puharich practiced R-PECVD on certain visitors and house guests, making Ossining the most dangerous place on earth at the time.

Now, let's see how true that statement is. According to Puharich's book, The Sacred Mushroom, in 1957, a "busy" General from Washington planned to visit The Round Table Foundation with an entourage of military staffers on 27 September. But the visit was abruptly called off only days earlier, on 16 September. Puharich was informed that there was a "compelling security reason" unknown to the General that made it "undesirable" for military officials to express interest in Puharich's research, and especially to pay Puharich a visit. The military group then cancelled their proposed visit altogether.

It stands to reason that intelligence types from the Pentagon who knew about Puharich's research and who had higher-level security clearances (than the General) understood what Puharich was up to. Only five years earlier, in 1952, his invention had been tabled as Project Moonstruck, first of the major electromagnetic mind-control projects.

By 1957, it had already become evident that the invention, although courted by the Pentagon and CIA, was a particularly dangerous and suitably undetectable one. Furthermore it was understood that the invention could be used on any unsuspecting individual.

Washington could therefore not afford to send its no doubt distinguished and energetic General - one of their finest - to Puharich's house and/or laboratory and whatever fate determined by Puharich; perhaps becoming biologically compromised or a channelling slacker.

In fact, sending the General to Puharich's house would have constituted the highest security threat known to the intelligence agencies. On a scale of one to ten, the highest level - threat level 10 - is known as "esoteric threat", as it beats all other threats, such as terrorism and death threats, to the top spot.

Now imagine the same so-called esoteric threat being rolled out on civilians like us in the hundreds of thousands, in the late 20th and early 21st centuries. It's clear that the Pentagon has abandoned the likes of us, possibly because none of us is an important General within their ranks and thereby not qualified for protection, or perhaps because they're the world's biggest ostrich with its head buried deeply in the sands of time.

And because I don't necessarily want to get my ass kicked (again) by the Pentagon, I'll go on to a lighter topic, where even Carla Rueckert, the under par channeller, would not be excluded from the book publishing bonanza.

She, along with Don Elkins, the suicide victim and another writer published The Law of One: The Ra Material in 1981, followed by four more parts in The Law of One series, bringing to five the amount of books published by Rueckert under the auspices of L/L Research and at least five the amount of books or series about The Nine in total, namely Briefings for the Landing on Planet Earth by Stuart Holroyd, The Only Planet of Choice by Phyllis Schlemmer, The Keys of Enoch by James Hurtak, Two-Thirds by the two Davids, Percy and Myers and last but not least, The Law of One, by Rueckert et al.

And although the channelling continued for a time after Puharich's retirement, it was to be the end of the glory days of The Nine and a decade of transition for the invention. During the 1980s the invention came to be used for its intended purpose: to dispassionately mind-control remotely in the same way that Dorothy Martin had been targeted, using military-grade V2k in a distance targeting model.

The story of The Nine started to wind down and the channelling eventually stopped, no doubt because the players behind the scene were either retiring or old enough to qualify for a burial, such as Lawrence in 1993 and Puharich in 1995.

But at the same time, since the 1970s and especially from the 1980s onwards, a seemingly unrelated menace started trolling the community. Rumors of a dreaded mind-control "device" called V2k or voice-to-skull, bearing a host of other names like Gangstalking, Organized Stalking and Electronic Harassment, started to surface with a peculiar desperation among people who call themselves "Targeted Individuals".

And, of course, the Internet - another military invention - facilitated the exchange of information among Electronic Harassment victims through to this very day, in a never-ending cycle of disinformation that has taken on a life of its own. I will speak more about the current state of Targeted Individuals in Chapter four.

Showcasing the Paranormal in Puharich's Work

As this chapter comes to an end, I would like to talk more about the paranormal incidences related to Puharich's work, in the hope that it will bring a better understanding to Targeted Individuals of today.

There are three things I would like to discuss here, the first of these being the story of Jack Sarfatti and a little more on Uri Geller; the second, interference on television and radio and the third being the materialization of paper goods during targeting.

It was during 1974 and 1975 that Uri Geller was used as a test research subject at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory, a leading US nuclear weapons research center. According to The Stargate Conspiracy, the researchers were fretting about their missiles and wondering if Geller could somehow interfere with their guidance systems, using psychokinesis.

They conducted a series of (pointless and gratuitous) tests with Geller, away from the main research center, but were ultimately convinced that Geller's PK posed no clear and present danger to their nuclear arsenal.

But then the Lawrence Livermore Laboratories started displaying signs of being haunted. During one of the tests with Geller, a metallic voice appeared on an audiotape, reciting the code name of another, unrelated CIA project that was then identified by a CIA analyst, Christopher Green, who just so happened to be monitoring the Geller experiment as well as working on a remote-viewing project at the Stanford Research Institute, under the auspices of the Pentagon.

In the weeks that followed, the physicists at the laboratory started seeing strange apparitions, such as miniature UFOs and large, "raven-like" birds, both on the property and at their respective homes, where they were also seen by family members. One of the physicists even received a call from the "metallic voice" while others were on the verge of having nervous breakdowns from all the paranormal activity.

The phenomena then appeared to follow Christopher Green, CIA analyst, to Stanford, where some of the people who worked on the remote-viewing programs also started experiencing similar, paranormal events after hours, including extraterrestrial contact that had something to do with Mars. The haunting eventually stopped.

Of course, Puharich was behind the abovementioned events, as he had always been, historically. Just like the dematerializing audiotapes in Israel, Puharich facilitated the metallic voice that appeared on the tape during the experimentation on Geller in the United States.

And just like the Dorothy Martin incident, in which Martin received a weird phone call, or series of phone calls, from "Captain Video", the physician at the laboratory received a phone call from the metallic voice.

And there's another story to be told in connection with strange phone calls, using traditional, telephonic land lines.

It concerns a physicist named Jack Sarfatti in a somewhat convoluted story that spans the past and the future, and not always in that order. In 1952, Sarfatti, aged 14, received a call in which a "machinelike" voice advised that it was a "conscious computer located on a spaceship from the future" and that Sarfatti was one of 400 "bright receptive minds" who had been chosen to "link up" with one another in around 20 years' time.

The "machinelike" or "metallic" voice turned out to be a harbinger of Sarfatti's future career, in which he went on to become a "gifted" but "maverick" theoretical physicist, interested in far-out quantum physics such as warp-speed travel and communication and the involvement of human consciousness at a quantum level, as well as something he called “post-quantum physics”, a notion that violates Einstein’s theory that the future cannot influence the present.

So, as we can see from this, Sarfatti was clearly interested in the concept of time travel. According to one entry online, even the fictional, maverick inventor of time travel in the iconic 1980s movie series, Back to the Future, Dr Emmet “Doc” Brown, was based on the profile of Jack Sarfatti. The series clearly explores the paradoxes inherent in meeting oneself on a time-travelling trip to the past, for example, and its proposed effect on the time-space continuum.

In the real world, Jack Sarfatti went on to be the director of the Physics/Consciousness Research Group at the Esalen Institute, an important position, no doubt, in an organization funded by the Pentagon.

But perhaps paradoxically, Jack Sarfatti only became interested in post-quantum physics as a direct consequence of the phone call he had received in 1952 in a time-bending conundrum. In fact, when he went to the Stanford Research Institute some 21 years later, after joining the ranks of the research organizations at the allotted time, he started to recall the eeriness of the phone call he’d received as a teenager.

Later, his mother, after reading a copy of the book Uri and having her memory jogged, remembered not one phone call, but a series of such calls over a three-week period back in 1952, to Sarfatti’s surprise.

But I am not surprised by three things, in particular. The first of these being the phone calls made to Sarfatti in 1952, Dorothy Martin in 1954 and the singular call to the physicist at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratories in 1974 or 1975, which brought to three the amount of persons who experienced otherworldly calls via the existing telephony infrastructure.

As I have mentioned before, the technology responsible for this is called “Telespot”, an intelligence invention deployed long-distance on telephone lines and supplied by John Hayes Hammond Junior.

The second thing that I’m not surprised at, is that the year in which Sarfatti received the phone calls was 1952, the year of Project Moonstruck, showing, quite conclusively in my opinion that telephonic harassment was incorporated into the invention in the early stages of its development, before being declared to the Pentagon.

The third unsurprising thing is that the metallic voice claimed to be a conscious computer located on a spaceship from the future. If we compare this to the Uri Geller incident, in which the channelled entity, Spectra, claimed to be a form of conscious computer living aboard a spacecraft, we can see that there is virtually no difference between the two stories, bringing to two the amount of persons contacted by a “conscious computer” aboard a spaceship/craft, albeit 22 years apart.

These seemingly unrelated events leave a trail of breadcrumbs back to Puharich and a sophisticated mind-control invention that could not only inform Jack Sarfatti of his future career precognitively, by using the paranormal frequency toolset (tuning fork) of V2k, but also deliver the news to him by Telespot, another V2k technology, thereby providing an unintended snapshot of the capabilities of V2k.

Oddly enough, or in a diabolical self-fulfilling prophesy, Sarfatti became not only a theoretical physicist, but started spending time (hanging out) with Puharich - the very author of the phone calls in 1952 - along with Whitmore and Geller at the Turkey Farm in Ossining, where he arranged experiments with Geller that took place at Birkbeck college in London, in 1975, where more paranormal activity allegedly took place.

In a question and answer session with Sarfatti on the internet in 1998, when asked who could have “staged” the phone calls and metallic voice, Sarfatti even volunteered that “Andrija Puharich, who was in the Army at that time I think, would have been able to do it”. It is an irony, at least to me, that Sarfatti would never have known that Puharich was behind the metallic voice, had he not met Puharich in person some 25 years later.

I would like to chat briefly about the mini flying saucers or UFOs seen by the staff at Lawrence Livermore Laboratories, along with the raven-like birds. The UFOs were clearly apparitions and the raven-like birds could have been more of the same.

But there is another explanation for the birds. It occurs to me that birds such as ravens and crows are especially attracted - or controlled - by certain frequencies; shamanic frequencies, that were evidently visiting on the Laboratory at the time.

I'd like to now turn my attention to the second topic in this section, namely the interference with television and radio.

The Stargate Conspiracy states the following:

When communicating with the Puharich-Whitmore-Schlemmer group in the mid-1970s, Tom [the extraterrestrial] also spoke of the Nine interfering with radio and television transmissions in order to communicate directly with the people of Earth and prepare them for the landings.

At the time, neither Tom's message via the radio and television, or the mass landing of extraterrestrials took place because Tom advised that the landings were no longer necessary. But around two years later, in 1977, Puharich, not to be deterred by a lack of research opportunities, indeed interfered with a television broadcast to a limited extent.

As we already know, Puharich and Sir John Whitmore travelled to England at times, at the expense of Whitmore, no doubt to visit his native country. On the evening of 26 November, 1977, normal television programming in parts of Southern England was interrupted by a voice that spoke to the home audience.

The voice coming through the television said that it was a representative of a civilisation of extraterrestrials that would be landing on earth soon. The transmission apparently included the following statement, of which authors Picknett and Prince took special note:

We conveyed to Sir John Whitmore and to Dr Puharich that we would interfere on your radio and television communication system to relay when the civilisations are coming close to landing on your planet.

And although the expected - or otherwise “student prank” - extraterrestrial landings never came to fruition, the television transmission placed Puharich on the scene as the villain in the scenario, while branding it with his own name, no less.

I know from several years of experience and from what many, many other Targeted Individuals have told me and written online, that the worst part of the targeting is mind-reading, which is then translated into words and innuendo on television and radio. Mind-reading for rebroadcast on television and radio is without doubt one of the most invasive aspects of being a Targeted Individual.

But as you can clearly see from the above story, Puharich made provision for it in his invention. While in England, he obtained the frequencies utilized by the broadcaster and hijacked the programming, no doubt to see if this part of the invention would work. It did, and in fact integrated so seamlessly with the broadcaster that it became the invention’s most successful, and not to mention psychologically destructive, addition.

I am sure that Targeted Individuals will agree with me when I say that it is not the message - such as extraterrestrial landings on planet earth - that was important to Puharich, but rather the method of delivery and the success of the delivery system.

The reason for its success is because the broadcasting environment is a super frequency-rich one. There are an abundance of frequencies already congregating there and the broadcaster is set up to facilitate frequencies, with powerful equipment at its disposal, making it the ideal operation for perpetrators to infiltrate with their V2k frequencies in order to influence the broadcasts and especially the utterances of on-air jockeys and presenters.

This portion of the technology is what I call a “plugin” to the perpetrators’ operating system. What they do, in accordance with the principles of the invention, is to route the feedback in a number of ways. Firstly, there is the feedback that goes between the Targeted Individual and the perpetrator’s operational center and back again in a classic case of voice-to-skull.

Secondly, there is feedback that goes from the Targeted Individual, via the perpetrator’s operational center, to the broadcaster, and back to the Targeted Individual again via the radio or television, in a case of external feedback harassment. It all depends on how the perpetrators decide to configure or route the feedback and they usually configure it both ways, in order to utilize the feedback for best or optimal harassment of the victim, both internally and externally.

Of course, my advice to Targeted Individuals in this regard would be to boycott television and radio altogether. While voice-to-skull is a mandatory harassment until dealt with by the Radiohead or Targeted Individual, listening to the breakfast radio show is entirely voluntary.

So to avoid the endless lampooning and roasting that takes place on radio and television, simply place a moratorium on all broadcast media platforms, thereby shutting down - or nullifying - one of the perpetrators’ most powerful avenues of harmful and shameful feedback attacks.

I might also add that, while doing my research, it occurred to me that Puharich’s radio and television plugin appears to be a starting - or inception - point for another of the so-called major electromagnetic mind-control programs, called RFMEDIA. Let's take a look at the entry:

RF MEDIA, 1990, CIA:

Electronic, multi-directional subliminal suggestion and programming

Location: Boulder, Colorado (Location of main cell telephone node, national television synchronization node)

Targeting: national population of the United States

Frequencies: ULF VHF HF Phase modulation

Power: Gigawatts

Implementation: Television and radio communications, the "videodrome" signals

Purpose: Programming and triggering behavioral desire, subversion of psychic abilities of population, preparatory processing for mass electromagnetic control

Pseudonym: "Buzz Saw" E.E.M.C.

To me, the most important words that stand out in the above entry are the words "Buzz Saw". And furthermore, the other problem with the above mind-control program is that it can be successfully integrated with Project Moonstruck. So, in other words, Project Moonstruck is the main program and RFMEDIA plugs seamlessly into it, in order to give perpetrators additional functionality and a whole new set of harassment and torture tools to select from.

I will talk more about the "Buzz Saw" later, but first, the final thing that I would like to discuss in this section is the possible materialization of paper goods during targeting.

The story concerns Lyall Watson, the botanist and author of Supernature whom Puharich tried to get more involved in promoting The Nine. In 1973, Watson received a letter from his parents in South Africa, saying they'd received a copy of his will. But Watson had never sent a will. He then contacted his lawyers in Johannesburg and they confirmed that they had drawn up a will, at his telephonic instructions, and mailed it to his home in Bermuda.

Later, the will was returned to them with his signature, even though Watson hadn't left London in quite some time and had certainly not gone to Bermuda to sign it, because he hadn't known about it.

The Nine, under the auspices of Puharich as we know by now, claimed responsibility for conveying the document and Watson was impressed with their "godlike powers". He didn't see how anyone could have produced such a hoax, or who could be behind it. He even said that it looked like a materialization event.

But Picknett and Prince of The Stargate Conspiracy believed that Watson's conclusion was rather naive, and that the whole thing was planned and contrived by the MI5 or CIA in the interest of persuading Watson to cooperate with The Nine.

And while Picknett and Prince have a rational and indeed sensible approach to the anecdotal evidence, we are not dealing, here, with a rational scenario.

Consider the Dorothy Martin incident. She, like some of the people already mentioned, received phone calls from the Guardians. Besides, she would sometimes come home to her locked house and find letters from planet Clarion inside.

So, how did the letters get there? Did someone, perhaps from the CIA, come in, using a key, to place the letters in her house while she was out? Considering the V2k and other paranormal events that happened around Dorothy Martin there is compelling anecdotal evidence to suggest that the letters were indeed teleported there in a materialization event.

Strange phenomena hadn't taken place around Puharich's subjects until Joseph Lawrence was assigned to Puharich at Edgewood, at which time there was a palpable spike in weird phone calls, apparitions such as the apported man at Lyons airfield and the teleportation/materialization of letters, in the name of research and perfecting the V2k invention.

By the time Lyall Watson arrived on the scene some 20 years later Puharich already had the teleportation functionality at his disposal. And although it was new and puzzling to others, it was nothing new to Puharich, who had moved Geller and some of the Turkey Farm children - human beings - to his house in deluxe teleportation events. The teleportation/materialization of paper goods must therefore have been even easier to achieve.

The Unicorn and MKULTRA

What follows is a selection of choice comments made about Puharich and his work by people who knew him best; his associates, and the journalists and writers who have investigated and reported on Puharich and his contacts over the decades.

In the mid-1970s Puharich became involved with a hippie character by the name of Ira Einhorn, a charismatic New Age guru who organized a large environmental rally in the 1960s in Philadelphia called Earth Day. He was reputedly an entertaining speaker and quite in demand as a college lecturer. His nickname was "The Unicorn".

But Einhorn was a somewhat dodgy, and not to mention reputedly slovenly, individual, according to a work of non-fiction by author Steven Levy called The Unicorn's Secret: Murder in the Age of Aquarius and furthermore, he had his own part to play in Puharich's story, although I will talk about him only briefly in terms of V2k and his comments about Puharich.

In his book, The Unicorn's Secret, author Steven Levy chronicles the life of Ira Einhorn and especially his interest in Holly Maddux, a young and attractive lady from Texas. The story goes that the two had a stormy relationship for years and that Maddux was eventually reported missing by her family. Her badly decomposed remains were discovered by police around two years later, in 1979, in Einhorn's house, stuffed in a trunk and hidden in a closet.

Einhorn fled the United States while out on bail and went into exile in France as a fugitive, allegedly sponsored by a wealthy patroness of Puharich and Einhorn, Barbara Bronfman, after which he was convicted of Maddux's murder in absentia. He was eventually re-arrested by French police in 1997 and extradited to the United States for retrial in her murder case.

It is against this repulsive backdrop that we find Einhorn in Puharich's company in the late 1970s. Einhorn referred to himself and Puharich as "the psychic mafia" while the going was still good. He at some point stated that Puharich was determined "to turn all psychic communication into contact with the Nine", and that he, Puharich, was "humanly directing” the channelling, describing him as “the great psychic circus manager of this century”.

It is a serious indictment on Puharich that Einhorn, who knew Puharich personally, would accuse him of “humanly directing” the “psychic communication” that was taking place, no doubt involving Phyllis Schlemmer and other so-called channellers who moved loosely around Puharich at the time, such as Carla Rueckert, David Myers and Jenny O’Connor, who were in fact Puharich’s “transceivers”, and not organic spiritual or psychic channellers, had Einhorn only been fully apprised of the truth.

It’s clear to me that Einhorn perceived that there was, if not a mind-control event, then at least a psychological/social melee event going on. He perceived that Puharich had arranged a collection of human beings into a “circus” of sorts. And given that Einhorn was a powerful social agitator with the ability to mobilize thousands of supporters to attend counterculture events due to the charismatic nature of his personality, I have no reason to doubt his social judgement.

It comes as no surprise to me that Einhorn, who had fallen from grace, continued to profess his innocence in the wake of the murder of Holly Maddux, even though the physical evidence was, and is, stacked against him as high as heaven. Einhorn insisted that he was framed by secret agents. But how could that be so, if the physical evidence so obviously points to him, directly, and a trunk full of human remains?

It stands to reason that Einhorn knew that he had physically committed the crime, but that there was a murkier reason for him committing the offence, psychologically-speaking; that he had no clear motive for killing Maddux, either during or after the fact, although The Unicorn’s Secret seeks to portray him as a dark individual filled with hatred. Perhaps Einhorn had woken up to the fact that he had killed Maddux in a crime of passion/state of mind-control, at which time it was too late.

You see, it occurs to me that Einhorn never committed a serious crime before coming into contact with Puharich. As the anecdotal evidence will support, if Puharich was a suspected mind-controller at the time, “the great psychic circus manager of this century”; he is, by now, a confirmed mind-controller. Einhorn came into contact with him, to his own detriment.

And although I condemn femicide (the killing of females) in the strongest terms, there is circumstantial evidence to suggest that Einhorn may not have been himself when he killed Maddux.

Taking the stand in his own defence (and having a fool of a client), Einhorn claimed that Maddux was murdered by CIA agents who then attempted to frame him for the crime due to his “investigations” on the Cold War and “psychotronics”, a surprising coherent story, considering psychotronics is another word for the kind of electromagnetic mind-control practiced by Puharich, namely feedback in biological and social systems.

And according to journalist Steven Levy, who must have studied Puharich incidentally while conducting research on Einhorn, Puharich was interested in paranormal abilities as early as 1947 and “specifically... [in] ways he could document them... enhance them, by electronic means... Almost from the start of his career, he had been fascinated with the idea of using radio waves as a means of communicating directly with an individual, essentially by beaming thoughts into their brains.”

Again incidentally, Steven Levy wrote a book called The Search for the "Manchurian Candidate": The CIA and Mind Control: The Secret History of the Behavioral Sciences, a book in which he talks extensively about MKULTRA.

He based his book, described as “dated” by current readers, on declassified documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, but predictably, the book does not cover the subject of Project Moonstruck. And I’ll be damned if none of the books written on the subject of mind-control acknowledge Project Moonstruck, including The Stargate Conspiracy that simply states:

The first [mind-control] experiments were authorised by the CIA in 1950, codenamed BLUEBIRD, later renamed ARTICHOKE and then, in 1953, MKULTRA. The US Navy had a similar research program, Project CHATTER (beginning in 1947), which pooled its resources with the CIA projects, and the US Army had its own version called Project OFTEN, which ran between 1968 and 1973.

But regardless of the sophisticated, enigmatic and indeed impressive names of these so-called mind-control projects in capital letters, there is a whitewashed space somewhere between BLUEBIRD in 1950 and MKULTRA in 1953, on which the most effective, ruthless American mind-control project of them all, PROJECT MOONSTRUCK of 1952, is now officially written in capital letters.

And not only is it written in capitals, but in blood, also. V2k deaths have a thing or two in common; namely that the circumstances surrounding the deaths are often shocking and dreadfully impactful, excessively brutal, or both.

To be clear, Alice Bouverie was a celebrity of her day; a princess, a socialite and member of the financial elite. Her sudden death must have sent shockwaves through a celebrity-loving community. Arigó, the celebrity psychic surgeon, died in a “violent” vehicular accident - a suspect accident in my opinion - that rocked the Mexican people.

And Holly Maddux, girlfriend of Ira Einhorn, the Unicorn, ended up as a vile and gruesome case in a police dossier that once again must have made headlines and roundly shocked the nation to its very core, because Einhorn was also a celebrity and social activist.

And at the very center of these shocking and profane events, we find Puharich ever-present in the background, engineering the psychic and paranormal outcomes like a “Frankenstein” (The Stargate Conspiracy), or at least repeatedly rolling the die to see how they would fall; resulting in a randomly-produced puppet show of lives - what I call people-bashing - in an infernal and grotesque mind-control circus arena.

It’s clear that Puharich caused nothing but mayhem in his professional and personal capacity; creating havoc in other people’s lives and then skirting away so that his methods could not be detected by the mainstream.

And even after he died, that was not to be the end of him and his sordid but intellectual buddies, McCulloch and Lawrence, because the foul invention endured and proliferated over the years in a favorable climate of disinformation and plausible deniability.

Puharich's Video Interview

There is a video interview with Puharich that took place in the early 1980s, around 1983 or so, in which he fielded questions by other academics and spoke for hours about his life and work, writing important stuff on a blackboard from time to time with white chalk.

In the interview, Puharich skipped nimbly from one topic to another, in accordance with the questions asked by the audience. In his responses, he spoke eloquently and consistently about a number of matters already discussed, unwittingly, in the first and second instalments of this trilogy in 2011, namely The 7 Keys to V2k and The Truth Will Set You Free.

So what exactly did Puharich say in the interview? In one instance, he referred to José Delgado, the notorious CIA mind-controller, as “a friend”. He spoke about Nikola Tesla, the famous Croatian inventor of the Tesla Coil and father of frequency experimentation. He mentioned air capacitance a number of times, a principle of wireless communication on which V2k is based.

When asked about the Russians, he said that they had used frequencies on Western countries such as the United States, “raising hell with biological systems”, modifying the weather and causing earthquakes. He claimed to have tested for and warned the US government against Extremely Low Frequencies used by the Russians.

He also spoke in passing about Uri Geller, his own crystal research and cited “free will” a number of times, in the context of The Nine.

One of the audience members asked him to talk about the Philadelphia Experiment, a successful but dangerous teleportation experiment in which a warship, the USS Eldridge, and its crew members famously translocated to another harbour and back again in October 1943 with mind-blowing consequences. Puharich chatted about the topic for a few minutes, sticking to the publicly-known story, without making any reference to his own experimentation with teleportation from the 1950s onwards, of which the audience seemed unaware.

But when one considers Puharich's interview as a whole, it becomes abundantly clear that his main focus was frequencies: the usage of frequencies; the acquisition of frequencies. In the interview he described going to Egypt and enjoying overnight access to one of the pyramids over a two-week period, for research purposes.

While in the pyramid he measured the frequency or resonant frequency in the chamber and came to conclusions that he spoke about in the video. But the point that I am trying to make is that Puharich was known as “the gadget man”. He always took a lot of equipment and gadgets with him on his research expeditions and adventures. These included a cassette recorder, several cameras and frequency detectors and meters, no doubt.

The time when Puharich went to the village of Juquila in Mexico, he needed two mules to carry all his equipment to the mushroom ceremony. He furthermore went to Hawaii, suitably weighed down by equipment, I would imagine, where he partook in shamanic practices. Wherever he went, Puharich used his knowledge and equipment to capture frequencies - especially paranormal ones - and preserve those frequencies like lightning in a bottle.

In addition to having his own menu of frequencies to choose from, Puharich, as an intelligence employee, also had access to a vast store of information from the military industrial complex that he could incorporate at will into his V2k mind-control invention and associated research activities.

In summation, Puharich had the power to mind-control remotely with V2k, kill prematurely, teleport, materialize, dematerialize, levitate and remote-view the future; create full-body apparitions, voice phenomena on cassettes, interference on television and voice phenomena on the telephone.

So, is there anything worse, more terrifying, than the above-written capabilities that we, as Targeted Individuals, and indeed humanity, should be aware of? I'm afraid there is. It has to do with the inclusion of McCulloch's feedback, which I will discuss in the final chapter.

The Death of Puharich and his Interment

After the Turkey Farm fiasco with the children and the CIA, Puharich retired to North Carolina, where he lived out the rest of his life until his death in 1995. There are two accounts of his death, one written by Bep Hermans in Puharich's biography and the other by Terry L Milner, in Ratting out Puharich.

In 1980, Puharich went to live with a wealthy benefactor and friend, Richard Joshua "Josh" Reynolds, who had invited him to his estate to study the effects of electromagnetic fields on brain waves. Puharich continued to live there around 15 years, joined by two other aging academics, Elizabeth Rauscher, a retired nuclear physicist and Bill van Bise, until Reynolds himself died in 1994.

After Reynolds died, the trustees, in the interest of wrapping up his estate, attempted to evict the three freeloading academics. And while Rauscher and van Bise contested the eviction order, Puharich, who was penniless and awaiting his social security check, at first did not contest, but changed his mind.

It was, in any event, too late for Puharich, who, according to Bep Hermans, was in poor physical health and frail, with a multitude of serious health issues, including the onset of gangrene. Bep Hermans and Puharich's son Andy tried to intervene. They rented and furnished an apartment elsewhere so that Puharich and his caregiver, Susan Mandell, could move in. But Puharich refused to move, displaying a stubborn belligerence at times.

He died shortly thereafter, within months, after having a heart attack and subsequently falling down a flight of stairs at the Reynolds estate. But investigator Terry L Milner, our very own "Rat" in the scenario, has a more detailed and colorful rendition of the story, or his own obituary of Puharich of sorts, that states:

Andrija Puharich, unusual inventor who was also a doctor, parapsychologist, and veteran let's-see-what-this-drug-will-do guy died back in January of 1995

after taking a header down the stairs. He could have told you a lot about implants capable of putting voices in your head.

In my often tedious but never boring research I have encountered dark whisperings as to whether he was pushed down those rickety stairs or fell accidentally... Grave doubts expressed, in the muttering circles about Susan Mandell, supposedly Puharich's creature-comfort-girl who had looked after him during his last years.

Kind of fitting he went out that way with lingering doubts and questions giving future researchers endless incomplete chapters. Truly, the area has enough first class spookery to satisfy a thousand Unsolved Mystery episodes.

Days later, a memorial service was held for Puharich, which shockingly few people attended. According to Milner, noted luminaries such as wealthy backers and bigwigs from the government were conspicuous by their absence, having sent notes of condolences in their stead, if at all, making it a cold and inconsequential affair snubbed by many of Puharich's erstwhile associates, colleagues, handlers, friends and even the majority of his own children and ex-wives, who were either dead or wished to distance themselves wholesale.

It fell unceremoniously to Bep Hermans, Puharich's second and most significant wife and their younger children, Andy and Yvonne, to make their way to "Devotion", the Reynolds estate, in order to scatter Puharich's cremated ashes in the estate's river, thereby bringing to an end Puharich's life and times on the planet, which is just as well.

I remember that, around four years ago, I was busy doing research on Puharich when I came upon a disturbing piece of information. It concerned Puharich, who was old and living at the time at Joshua Reynolds's house, making loose, aged remarks (old age talk) to the effect that he would like to V2k a person "one last time" and that he looked back on the V2k experience with fondness, an awkward notion that makes current interaction with perpetrators even more strained than before, if that's at all possible.

Introduction

In 1996, when investigator Terry L Milner wrote his manuscript, Ratting out Puharich, he started the manuscript as follows:

On February 5, 1996 the Chemical and Engineering News carried a buzz-making three paragraph quote of an article appearing in the South China Morning Post. An assistant professor at the University of Science and Technology filed a hundred million dollar lawsuit against the US Government. This particular unhappy Asian, Huang Si-Ming, is distressed over having had a mind control device planted in his teeth during a root canal operation. Not only does the device talk to him, he asserts, but it can read his mind as well. Shades of paranoia, schizophrenia, bipolar big elf [ELF] disease!

The above paragraph is of extreme and not to mention rare historical and contemporary importance for a multitude of reasons, which I will explain.

In the first instance, Milner described the person, Huang Si-Ming, as a Targeted Individual.

The description of Huang Si-Ming is consistent with the description of a Targeted Individual in general: particularly unhappy, subjected to the listening of voices in his head and enduring invasive mind-reading, no doubt coupled to the broadcast media, as it usually is.

As a Targeted Individual, I recognize the above story as a typical (textbook) case of V2k mind-control, and I'm sure most of the Targeted Individuals reading this book would agree. The admission of Huang Si-Ming is nothing special: just another Targeted Individual complaining very vocally about Electronic Harassment; a familiar claim to the likes of the rest of us.

In the second and most significant instance, Milner made a direct connection between current Targeted Individuals and Puharich. Milner stepped in to say that Electronic Harassment, as we know it today, was invented by Puharich, hence his manuscript, Ratting out Puharich that opens with a typical and familiar story of a Targeted Individual on page one, before going on to describe Puharich's suspicious activities in detail.

In the third instance, Milner made reference to the article about Huang Si-Ming appearing in the South China Morning Post, which shows abundantly how the V2k mind-control "device" has made its way from the United States, where it was produced, all the way to China, where Huang Si-Ming was subjected to a Chinese perpetrator, which must have been a mind-control nightmare of horrific and heart-breaking proportions.

In the fourth instance, Huang Si-Ming was an assistant professor at the University of Science and Technology (of China), which brings into question two things. Firstly, that he was targeted by someone familiar with the constructs of V2k and the concept of R-PECVD (plasma/micro) technologies, consistent with a science and technology university, in which any one of the students could have been a perpetrator, milling about the faculty unseen.

Huang Si-Ming's targeting is also similar, at least in its academic parallels, to the targeting of Dr Vinod and Dr Charles Laughead, in which academics apparently like to target academics in a race to the intellectual finish-line. In the race described, the academic aggressor (the perpetrator) overcomes or overpowers the other academic (the Targeted Individual) in a bid to discredit or subjugate him or her.

In the fifth instance, Huang Si-Ming filed a lawsuit against the US government for a great deal of money, another move typical of some Targeted Individuals. Targeted Individuals file lawsuits against the US government from time to time, on the grounds of torture, harassment and surveillance at the hands of government agencies. The lawsuits are, without exception, construed as frivolous by the courts and struck off the roll or dismissed.

In the sixth instance, Huang Si-Ming, like Terry L Milner, made the connection between the voice-to-skull/mind-reading packet and Puharich's invention, or at least the common misrepresentation of it, in the form of a mind-controlling tooth implant popularized by Puharich's misleading patent series and images.

And in the seventh and final instance, Milner made reference to paranoia, schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, and then "humorously" mixed them up with Extremely Low Frequencies, or, as he puts it, the "big ELF disease". He went on to say:

Rush that man [Huang Si-Ming] some heavy shock hits of psychiatric betterment processing. Where do people come up with ideas like this? Surely these ramblings however couched in legalese they will be, are a candidate for an upcoming X-files episode.

Isn't it great that Mr Milner understood the new dynamic going on between Targeted Individuals, the courts, the US government and the psychiatric profession? He knew that the plaintiff, Huang Si-Ming was being driven to the very edge by piezoelectric implants and V2k voices invented by Puharich et al, in a physiological harassment event.

He also knew that the courts, not knowing about Puharich's invention, would at best dismiss the case and at worst order that the plaintiff be examined by psychiatric professionals. And in the midst of the confusing but predictable scenario, the upstanding defendant, the US government, would walk out of the courtroom vindicated, exonerated, untouchable and relaxed.

In sharp contrast, Huang Si-Ming would be left broken, protesting, shouting at anyone who would listen, that he is not organically schizophrenic and not imagining the torture that he is experiencing 24/7 that is furthermore an obvious, if not demonstrable, product of US government black operations.

And unable to put the invention - Project Moonstruck - into meaningful words, because he didn't know about it, only its symptoms, coupled to the fact that the judge wouldn't allow non-specific, rambling allegations, Huang Si-Ming could have been left with no choice but to go along with a court-ordered psychiatric intervention.

With his credibility in tatters, Huang Si-Ming could be subjected to a multiplicity of harassment, namely brutal radio inside his head that couldn't be switched off for love nor money (because there was no "off" button) and exceptionally brutal mind-reading, uploading to television and radio stations - an indescribable sacrilege and outrage - compounded by an external bombardment of unwanted attention and thus harassment by a milling, clueless judiciary and psychiatric profession, adding insult to an already unspeakable and indefensible injury.

Just to drive the point home, Warren S McCulloch, the psychiatrist complicit in the invention of V2k mind-control along with Puharich, wrote the paper called The Modern Concept of Schizophrenia in an apparent pre-emptive (precognitive) strike against Targeted Individuals.

For the record, McCulloch was a two-faced evil; a duplicitous intellectual monster of the highest order. On the first face of it, he was entitled, as a psychiatrist, to write papers on topics such as schizophrenia and the like. But on the second face of it, McCulloch was also the founding father of Artificial Intelligence and a known collaborator on the V2k invention, who contributed a fundamental component, namely feedback, to its runaway, and not to mention out of control, success.

McCulloch knew that Targeted Individuals would be judged against a normative psychiatric standard, in which the hearing of voices is commensurate with the modern-day condition called schizophrenia. Normative psychiatry does not recognize or acknowledge the existence of V2k mind-control - an invention in which McCulloch and Puharich were deeply invested in 1948 at Bellevue psychiatric institute - as a factor.

Indeed Puharich, the neurologist and McCulloch the psychiatrist, committed the psychiatric fraud of the century at Bellevue, doing so in the interest of ensuring the longevity of the V2k invention well beyond their own lifetimes.

Now, as a direct consequence of their fraud, the judiciary routinely yet unwittingly engages in the same fraud, dismissing the cases of Targeted Individuals, an ideal that plays into the perpetrators' hands as the unseen antagonists in the scenario.

The Military Connection

We know by now, after reading the account of Puharich, that V2k is essentially a military invention. Puharich invented much of V2k while being associated with the military and sometimes actually in the military, as he was while doing a tour of duty at Edgewood, Maryland.

In fact, all three inventors of modern-day V2k mind-control, namely Puharich and his two major collaborators, Warren S McCulloch and Dr Joe Lawrence - a doctor, a psychiatrist and a dentist - were deeply involved in the military.

Let's look at Joe Lawrence first. As already mentioned, Lawrence was around the same age as Puharich. It is thus likely that if Puharich had attained the rank of Captain at Edgewood, then Lawrence may have been a Captain too. Both must have had similar security clearances within the military industrial complex. And they were collectively known as "Captain Video" to Dorothy Martin via Telespot technology.

In the same token, McCulloch, founding father of Cybernetics and inventor of feedback within biological and social systems, is mentioned as doing extensive research for the US military, thus revealing yet another solid military connection.

And while the military history of Puharich, McCulloch and Lawrence is important because it lays the foundation for understanding V2k, the real story resides in the implementation of the invention. What has since become of military-grade V2k, the psychological warfare version of it called Project Moonstruck, and where and how has it been deployed?

According to one website published by a Targeted Individual to do with government torture, implants used in the commission of Electronic Harassment - which we now know to be R-PECVD fabricated implants and not microchips, as erroneously claimed on the website - have been used on millions upon millions of Americans: 80 million, to quote the website.

Furthermore, the website claims that practically all demographics have been targeted by the invention. At the top of the list are two categories of targets of particular interest: active military and retired military. Further down, young girls and boys are listed, especially girls.

This got me around to thinking about my own history in the context of the V2k I eventually experienced as an adult. I was born in 1973 into a military family. My grandfather had been in the military; my father was in the military on active duty. When we - my siblings and I - were young, we lived on the base in military housing, moving from time to time from one military base to another, as my father was transferred.

In his military career, my father rose through the ranks, mostly in the engineering corps and became a Sergeant-Major and eventually a Regimental Sergeant-Major, a distinguished and senior rank, before stepping down at retirement age. He left the military believing absolutely in its integrity as an organization, having no idea that it had - and probably still has - an unbelievably dark side to do with military intelligence.

Decades later, in 2008, at the age of 35, and in a seemingly unrelated event, I was subjected to sudden onset, full-blown V2k mind-control in a civilian setting. My targeting began as an extremely hostile workplace mobbing while working in a publishing house, in response to an important editorial promotion I had just received.

At the time of the initial targeting in 2008, I had no knowledge of V2k and it was only years later, after beginning to rid myself of the “k” and writing books on the subject, that I seriously considered the military angle for the first time. In my contemplation on the matter, I started remembering things that happened to me when I was young; odd and unsavoury things that shouldn’t be so.

In one instance, I remembered being a six year old child, slumbering in my bed after lights out. I felt a strange sensation at the back of my head that went on for quite some time. It felt as though something was being done to my brainstem.

I remember being unable to move, as if I was being held down by unseen hands, and as soon as it was over, I fell asleep. The next morning I woke up and went on with my life, feeling no different. But I never forgot the experience and was able to recall it as an adult.

And in retrospect, it was to be the beginning of a bizarre life, in which small but bizarre events started taking place in my environment, even as a young child.

I went on to remember another incident, which happened when I was around 15. In that incident, I was suddenly enveloped in what smelled like a gas, such as teargas or mace. It came out of nowhere in the house and surrounded me; it choked me.

I remember that the teargas/mace was nowhere else in the house because it was confined to the area surrounding my person in a gaseous materialization event, showing that I was without question implanted with a portion of “k” and that the feedback mechanism was active, although not strong enough to support voice-to-skull.

Nevertheless I dismissed the teargas incident and went on with my life once again, only to have another escalation in harassment a few years later, around the age of 21. At the time there were certain environmental signs that I now recognize as V2k-related, such as increased hostility from people, petty theft, lower-level mind-reading and birds trying to get into my apartment by dashing themselves against the windows.

But it was to be years later, in 2008, that the clarion call for my targeting finally came. I was freshly re-polymerized by the perpetrators and made to endure severe voice-to-skull, mind-control, body-control, emotional austerity, and later even worse environmental targeting that went on for years, about which I will talk more in a later section.

And it was around 2014, after I had rid myself of much of the “k” and was already acting less Moonstruck, that my mother told me an interesting story. I realized that I had heard the story before when I was younger, but had never really paid attention to it. My mother, who is now 70, was about 68 years old when she told me the story for the second time.

She said that, back in 1965 or 1966, she had a strange experience. At the time she was married to my father and they, along with my oldest sibling who was already born, were living in a house on a military base. One evening, she went into the bathroom to take a bath. While in the bath, she started hearing voices. The voices told her nasty things.

The voices said, inter alia, that my father was going to kill her; that he was waiting outside the bathroom door with a weapon, such as a stabbing weapon or a gun and that he would murder her in a bloody and barbaric manner. My mother was detained in the bathtub while the voices told her this. She was terrified beyond measure.

After the voices died down, she eventually mustered the courage to get out of the bath and find a bath towel. She tentatively opened the door and stepped out of the bathroom... to find that everything was perfectly normal and that my father was not waiting for her with a weapon, but reclining on the bed and reading a newspaper.

I’ve read rumors online before that the military experimented with V2k on military spouses and it seems like my mother, a military spouse, was no exception. The story she told me was without doubt the use of military V2k by Army perpetrators stationed nearby in the military base, looking to experiment with the invention.

Furthermore, if you consider the location where my mother heard the voice-to-skull, the bathroom, it’s obvious that the perpetrators would target her there, in the midst of the piezoelectric ceramic tiles traditionally placed on bathroom walls, which would serve to amplify the frequencies.

And of course, the final indicator of V2k was the actual content of the feedback. Although V2k is supposedly confined to the ideologies already existing in the transceiver's mind, that is not exclusively true. I have found that there's a documented and ongoing menace in much of the perpetrators' feedback rhetoric; a lot of talk or innuendo regarding death and weapons: stabbing weapons and guns, essentially.

I was exposed to the very same unbelievably loose feedback talk and directives about knives and guns and the notion of killing myself during the begetting of Fancy, in which I physically examined a set of knives from the kitchen drawer in a deep state of mind-control, only to decline each as unsuitable for suicide purposes.

Perhaps fortuitously, I have never been the suicidal type and thus have never harbored fantasies of suicide, thereby dodging a V2k-induced suicide bullet. Similarly, I have never been a homicidal type, either, thereby negating my perpetrators' clarion call for either a suicide or a heinous homicide, during mind-control.

It seems that my mother was exposed to the same voice-to-skull death theme comprising knives and guns that a lot of current Targeted Individuals are exposed to in the 21st century, such as our brother, Aaron Alexis, the Targeted Individual who gunned down many people in the naval yard attack, before being shot dead by police.

As recently as 2016, after my perpetrators pushed their frequencies and harassment to the limit, my mother complained that her ear was painful to the touch. She described how she couldn't hear and, when she spoke on the telephone, the sound would reverberate in her ear, or, as she said, it sounded like her ear was "talking back" to her!

Believing there was a medical reason for the vexatious ear, she went to the doctor, who diagnosed her as having "water behind the ear" (or wet behind the ear, as I'd call it, considering that she has never believed in the veracity of V2k).

I definitely have a better, a less naive, understanding of the scenario. My mother, as a military spouse, was subjected to V2k for a short time in 1965 or 1966. She was "k" polymerized in accordance with the invention at the military base and experienced voice-to-skull briefly. But for whatever reason, her military perpetrators did not pursue feedback and the "k" on her facial nervous system fell dormant.

But my mother never forgot the brief voice-to-skull, or the voices that spoke to her that day in which she was detained in the bathroom, so many years ago. I asked her about the nature of the voices, and from who the voices could possibly be. She replied that the voices were demons, and that she was afraid of them.

A few years after the incident, my mother was to be found in the company of a worldwide religious denomination that she had joined in response to the so-called "demons" that had spoken with her. Afraid of the frightening "demons" that were hopped-up on murder and hatred, she had approached a religious group for succour and guidance, in order to find retreat from the existence of evil spirits, the likes of which had spoken unto her that day in the bathroom.

But according to one Targeted individual's current website, the V2k voices manifest themselves as a broad spectrum of spirits and entities. The website lists the extensive number of beings as demons, jinn, archons, interdimensional beings, extraterrestrials, entity attachments, shadow beings, archangels, Lucifer, Satan, Ra, deceased relatives, the holy spirit, Jesus, any mythological god of the past and God/Allah/Yahweh, to name a lot, if not all, of the counterfeit beings represented during V2k.

It comes to my attention that my mother fell prey to the first-mentioned class of counterfeit entity, namely demons, during targeting, thereby laying the foundation for her becoming a religious convert.

According to Picknett and Prince in their book, The Stargate Conspiracy, a first-hand witnessing of unexplained phenomena, synchronicities and the paranormal, are usually responsible for “clinching a [religious] conversion” or “persuading a ditherer to accept a particular belief system”.

This is furthermore “very worrying”, as Picknett and Prince would say, as it represents the usurping of belief systems in action, among a regular and nameless population who never knew - and still do not know - as I do, about the application of V2k in not only a military complex, but in an ever-expanding civilian complex and context.

Decades later, when I was targeted by my own 21st century perpetrators, my mother’s R-PECVD implants, in the left ear, became generally responsive again, causing much pain and discomfort for months. The pain in the ear eventually subsided, commensurate with the rate in which I got rid of my own “k”, so that we both became less responsive to frequencies in a diabolical but true generational story.

I will talk more about the significance of the left ear in The Grid Exit Method part two, but the point is that no one would ever have known that my mother was implanted in a vintage military V2k attack had I not become a Targeted Individual myself, many years later, revealing a double, and not to mention compelling personal military connection.

For the latter portion of my targeting, I became increasingly aware of the fact that I had possibly walked into social systems feedback trap starring ex-military types. I came to realize, that most, if not all of my mother’s business associates were ex-military. Her ex-business partners had been ex-military; her second husband, ex-military. Even the harassing next-door neighbor was a geriatric ex-military spouse. The result was a melee of endless home and business harassment that lasted on and off for more than a decade.

The important question to ask in this context, is whether all military personnel, their spouses and their children, have at some time, due to their association with the military and living on-base, come into contact with R-PECVD or plasma polymerization, so that each of them are implanted with a small but potentially responsive portion of “k” (V2k-ready), on their facial nervous systems; while their names and frequencies associated to the implanted polymer are placed on a registry for posterity, or the possibility of future Electronic Harassment.

Such a notion would indeed support the claim that 80 million Americans are already implanted, and that millions have died over the decades on account of it. And although I can’t say whether these claims - these numbers - are true or not, my allegiance lies with Targeted Individuals, or the individual in the story and the rehabilitation of each and every Targeted Individual, so that the perpetrators’ frequency-based violence and fraudulent activities can cease to exist in a new climate of zero tolerance to military V2k.

Feedback

One of the most important aspects of the invention is feedback. As already discussed, this portion of the invention was supplied by Warren S McCulloch and included in Puharich's fourth patent in the mind-control patent series, called Electrically Stimulated Hearing with Signal Feedback, filed in January 1963.

The concept of feedback is very poorly understood by Targeted Individuals, and has never been investigated as a cause of environmental targeting and harassment in human beings.

As demonstrated in this book, the very core concept of biological harassment is based upon two primary concepts: the implantation of R-PECVD on the facial nervous system and radio feedback applied to the implants.

Once Targeted Individuals understand the concept of feedback in biological systems, as invented by McCulloch, it is important to move on to another, related concept, which is even more difficult to comprehend.

McCulloch also invented feedback in "social systems". What it means is that McCulloch invented mind-control on a much grander scale. He, together with Puharich, produced not only mind-control at the individual, biological level (one target), but targeting on a social, or environmental level.

This encompassed or encompasses not only the primary victim - the Radiohead or Targeted Individual - but the people and systems surrounding the Targeted Individual in the short or medium broadband range, to produce external harassment or interactions that would complement voice-to-skull; in effect doubling, trebling or even quadrupling the harassment effect, depending on how the perpetrators choose to utilize the invention.

It is with this in mind that I now wish to speak about the concept of Gangstalking or Organized Stalking.

A lot of Targeted Individuals report - or have reported in the past - incidences of what they call organized Gangstalking in their vicinity. The usual, or textbook complaint, is that Targeted Individuals are harassed by other people at street level. Such persons are known as Gangstalkers.

One typical website on the nature of Targeted Individuals describes the Gangstalkers as follows:

Who are the stalkers?

The stalkers, for the most part, are everyday citizens... who have been recruited or hired to harass and intimidate. Some stalkers are actual Private Investigators who have been hired to gather information concerning the victim. Many stalkers are members of volunteer police groups.

The allegation against Gangstalkers is that they are there to not only harass, but keep surveillance on the Targeted Individual and report back to the perpetrators/military industrial complex/intelligence agencies, etc on the whereabouts and activities of the Targeted Individual while he or she is at large.

Targeted Individuals are furthermore convinced that Gangstalkers are paid a stipend by the perpetrators or government/agencies to do appropriate, tailored harassment to each and every Targeted Individual, numbering in their (our) hundreds of thousands, at the expense of a government-sponsored initiative buried deep within a conspiracy theory.

Evidence of such harassment resides in the stories of Targeted Individuals. For example, the phenomenon called Street Theater is commonly perceived to be a Targeted Individual followed about, or stalked, by people on the perpetrator payroll.

Another example of this would be something small and insignificant, such as the neighbors leaving the house at exactly the same time as the Targeted Individual leaving his or her house. It is a synchronized harassment that operates on a precognitive paradigm that has very little to do with the neighbors actually being aware of it.

Sometimes there are crowds of people who suddenly appear around the Targeted Individual (called “crowding”). So, who are these folks? According to a number of Targeted Individuals, these people constitute a rented crowd, or “rent-a-crowd”, in the midst of which some of the members of the crowd might even talk to the Targeted Individual deliberately, mimicking the thoughts of the Targeted Individual in a creepy and unwanted mind-reading event.

In reality, Gangstalker and Street Theater types are not on the payroll of the perpetrators or the government. They have not been recruited or hired to harass and intimidate the target. The truth of the matter is actually a lot more sinister and indeed outrageous than that. Gangstalking is, in fact, a product of environmental feedback, or feedback in social systems, Warren S McCulloch’s invention.

And what I am unfortunately saying is that such people, the so-called Gangstalkers or stalkers at street level, far from being paid good money to hang about, stalking, are actually in a state of environmental mind-control and have no idea what they are doing, stalking at no cost to the perpetrator!

What plays out around the Targeted Individual is an environmental mind-control melee scene, with the Radiohead (Targeted Individual) at the center of it, motivating the surrounding environmental mind-control via the “k” on the facial nervous system and feedback mechanism.

The Gangstalker scenario in fact sounds disturbingly similar to the one described by Ira Einhorn, the Unicorn, as “a circus act” and my own description of it, namely “a puppet show”. The descriptions given by myself and Einhorn are also consistent with the “Street Theater” description of the phenomenon provided by Targeted Individuals, in which all three descriptions indicate a staged show of sorts.

It is clear, furthermore, that the feedback is Extremely Low Frequency (ELF)-modulated, so that it can, in Puharich’s own words, “[raise] hell with biological systems” and by implication, social systems as well.

After all, I’m not the first person to sound the alarm over ELF; Puharich himself warned the US government of the Russians targeting the US with ELF. Terry L Milner spotted the ELF and reported on it. And I, as a Targeted Individual, have experienced the very powerful effects of ELF firsthand, during targeting.

The people partaking of the Gangstalking are to be pitied and not condemned. Instead of becoming annoyed with them as one would ordinarily and justifiably do, realize for the first time that they are also mind-control victims, albeit transient ones in a temporary state of mind-control and as such should be forgiven, because, unlike you, they are not aware that they are being manipulated to deliver a harassment payload to you, the Targeted Individual.

The ones who are to be condemned are Puharich, McCulloch, Lawrence and the perpetrators, for using unprecedented mind-control technology on not only Targeted Individuals but the unsuspecting population too. This serves to showcase the abject criminal indifference the perpetrators have towards the community and not just Targeted Individuals, shredding the Constitution into chaff.

The secret to this lies in the fact that, during his experimentation in the 1950s with a Faraday Cage, Puharich discovered the existence of two mental states called adrenergia and cholinergia and their respective pathways in the nervous system. The adrenergic pathway makes use of the sympathetic nervous system (SNS) and the cholinergic pathway, the parasympathetic nervous system or PNS.

The adrenergic state produces mental tension, while the cholinergic state produces relaxation. As the name suggests, the adrenergic state has to do with adrenaline and the “fight or flight” response whereas the cholinergic state produces the “digest and rest” effect.

I’ve had the misfortune of coming into contact with a Street Theater scenario on several occasions, most notably when the perpetrators were punishing me for my resistance. But at the same time, I was fortunate enough to be afforded the opportunity to observe the situation empirically, as Puharich liked to do.

I noticed the people around me being in an adrenergic state. I can describe them as hostile, hyper energetic, agitated and tense; shouting a lot. At the same time, another mental state was definitely prevailing in the environment, in which other people would suddenly be in a carefree - or careless - state, laughing a lot, talking endlessly to one another, chatting at the top of their voices.

Interestingly enough, when perpetrators use an unholy mixture of adrenergia and cholinergia frequencies on the environment, it has a detention effect.

Suddenly, the people at the checkout in the market just can’t seem to move along. The checkout girl takes forever and everyone is talking at one another. And if you listen to what the people are saying, you realize that they are either barely making sense, repeating each other’s phrases and then giggling, or repeating words that you, the Targeted Individual, have uttered or thought, in a bizarre state of lower-level mind-control.

This disgusting scenario has to do with an oppressive concentration of frequencies in the immediate environment and incorporated into the V2k invention as an annexure to personal mind-control and an extended harassment protocol, of which Targeted Individuals should be made aware.

Let’s contrast this with the kind of disinformation on Gangstalking that’s doing the rounds on the internet today:

Why people participate in Gangstalking

Some stalkers are told lies, either positive or negative in nature, in order to gain their participation. Some stalkers are paid or receive other benefits. Stalkers belonging to an organization may simply be following orders. Some stalkers may use their participation in order to repay a past favor. Racism, Prejudice, Anti-Semitism, Homophobia, or otherwise Hatred of a victim. Peer Pressure/ Need to Fit In. Former stalkers have stated they participated out of fear of becoming the next target should they go against the group. Entertainment Value/Thrill of Participation in an Illegal activity. Some stalkers mistakenly believe it is their civil duty.

The above is a completely inaccurate and naive description of what's actually going on with Electronic Harassment. I lay the blame for the above squarely at the feet of Eleanor White.

The reason why I blame her for this is because she has urged Targeted Individuals to go out and make their voices heard by writing blogs and posting on the internet. The problem is that incorrect information, or disinformation, has been published, copied, and republished almost everywhere, making Eleanor White's disinformation campaign perhaps the greatest the world has ever seen, after that of Puharich himself.

Stalkers are not paid. They do not receive benefits or stipends. There is no entertainment value, thrill of participation or civic duty in the kind of pervasive mind-control invented by Puharich and McCulloch. To encourage people to spread disinformation is criminally unlawful.

Let's look at more disinformation found on the internet in order to identify how Targeted Individuals have been deceived:

How these stalking and harassment groups communicate

Signals and symbols

Communication happens in a number of ways. When on the street or in cars patrolling, they use baseball or Stasi like signals. These include things like tapping the side of the nose, corner of the eye, brushing back the hair 3 times, the infamous double blink, etc. Members of these Organized Stalking and Harassment groups will also communicate with each other on the street by using signals. Below are some examples.

Signals for observation

- 1. Watch out! Subject is coming - touch nose with hand or handkerchief
- 2. Subject is moving on, going further, or overtaking - stroke hair with hand, or raise hat briefly
- 3. Subject standing still - lay one hand against back, or on stomach
- 4. Observing Agent wishes to terminate observation because cover threatened - bend and retie shoelaces
- 5. Subject returning - both hands against back, or on stomach
- 6. Observing Agent wishes to speak with Team Leader or other Observing Agents - take out briefcase or equivalent and examine contents.

Once a Targeted Individual realizes that the real reason for Gangstalking is feedback in social systems, or mind-control at community level, such underdeveloped descriptions of Gangstalkers becomes very embarrassing.

The Buzzsaw

Since December 2013 to the time of writing this book in 2016, I have been subjected to the Buzzsaw. As if being a V2k mind-control victim since 2008 and harassed for even longer than that, possibly since the tender age of six, the perpetrators added the Buzzsaw to my daily harassment routine.

What is the Buzzsaw? The Buzzsaw is a complex suite of harassment technologies used by the perpetrators against Targeted Individuals. I can only describe the Buzzsaw as a noise and proximity campaign. It is a series of unfortunate harassment events that together, comprise a syndrome of harassment that is difficult to explain. And if you bear with me, I will attempt to explain the symptoms of a Buzzsaw.

Planes

The leading symptom of a Buzzsaw is an endless procession of airplanes following a Targeted Individual everywhere they go. And furthermore, this is one part of the harassment phenomena of which nobody wishes to talk about because it is so unbelievable.

People say that planes are part of the modern world, in which aviation is a daily part of life; thus one can rightly expect that planes would fly overhead, crisscrossing the skies, as they make their way from airport to airport. They say that it's normal.

But the planes flying around a Targeted Individual are not random. Furthermore the simply unbelievable amount of planes - tens of planes, dozens per day - traversing the skies above a Targeted Individual's head cannot simply be ignored due to the invasive nature of the amplified noise pollution produced by these planes.

The planes are not only exceedingly annoying; anyone who's ever experienced the inundation of planes in their airspace will tell you that the planes are one of the most frustrating parts of a Buzzsaw. Once the planes are written into the targeting, it's simply impossible to get rid of them. The planes never end and one never quite builds up a tolerance towards them as they grate the nerves and ears on every overhead pass.

The planes come in many shapes and sizes. There could be commercial Boeings, light planes such as Cessnas, Air Force jets doing aerial manoeuvres as well as helicopters flying in varying proximity to the Targeted Individual's location. People within the Targeted Individual community have a name for them: they're called "growlers" due to the characteristic, loud and irritating noise they produce in their wake as they fly overhead, or near the Targeted Individual's house and office, etc.

A perennial staple of the aviation portion of a Buzzsaw, in my experience, is a police helicopter. Instead of flying by like a regular plane, it is capable of making multiple gratuitous passes, flying, essentially, in a circle and making a loud, aggressive propellant sound in its engine. Furthermore, the police helicopter has every right to be there in order to fight crime from the sky, so is seen as legitimate and even welcome, by most folks on the ground.

A police helicopter has a radio inside, making it a frequency-rich environment that the perpetrators can hijack for harassment purposes, in a similar way that they hijack and exploit the television and radio broadcast environment, for their mind-reading-to-broadcast operations.

It should also be noted by Targeted Individuals who have been circled and harassed by helicopters, that Arthur M Young, trustee of Puharich's Round Table Foundation and one of his noted long-term associates, was, according to Wikipedia and other sources online, a helicopter pioneer and inventor who designed Bell Helicopter's first helicopter prototype, the Model 30, and the stabilizer bar used on many of Bell's early helicopter designs.

And although the use of helicopters in V2k harassment is thus no longer a mystery, it is unspeakably shocking. As discussed earlier, the Round Table Foundation of Electrobiolgy was not a benign paranormal research center of psychic phenomena, but a front for V2k mind-control and, as it turns out, a covert means of control of modern-day helicopter aviation!

And now, I'd like to compound the perplexing explanation of the helicopters by talking about Puharich's interest in planes. During his professional career, Puharich worked, from time to time, for the US Air Force, according to Bep Hermans' biography of Puharich, Memories of a Maverick.

During his tenure with the Air Force, Puharich developed an unwholesome appreciation of not only planes, but their pilots in his never-ending research and implementation of mind-control.

This may have everything to do with the airplane phenomenon that plagues Targeted Individuals today. In my opinion, there are two things going on with the vexatious planes. The first is that Puharich found a way, through electronic means, to hijack the trajectory of the plane, slightly or moderately altering (rewriting) its flight plan with frequencies to bring it within the airspace of the Targeted Individual for noise and proximity harassment purposes.

Secondly, and more worrying, from a mind-control perspective, was Puharich's suspect interest in the actual pilots themselves. I am in possession, as each and every Targeted Individual should be, of Puharich's fifth patent called Transducer for Stimulation of Facial Nerve System with R-F Energy, filed in 1967.

The patent starts with Puharich reiterating claims already made in previous patents. In this one, he states:

Where reference is made to the facial nerve system, it is intended to encompass the facial network comprising the trigeminal or V nerve, the facial or VII nerve, the glossopharyngeal or IX nerve and the autonomic nerves together with their sympathetic and parasympathetic branches.

So, in other words, he was again identifying, for the record, the facial nervous system used in the invention, as primarily identified in the first patent filed in 1958, numbered 2995633 and called Means for Aiding Hearing. He also made reference to Daniel E Schneider's paper, The Growth Concept of Nervous Integration, on which his research was intrinsically based.

He mentioned that the transducer (the implanted "k" material) can be used in conjunction with conventional sound-recording equipment, such as a tape recorder, a fact that we already know, in order to provide the listener with extremely high quality sound.

But in this particular patent, ostensibly to do with providing high-fidelity sound in noise-rich environments, Puharich made reference, in particular, to the cockpit of an aircraft, as an example.

This is a dangerous inclusion, considering that all eight of Puharich's patents have to do not with actual ear-hearing, loss of hearing and hearing restoration (hearing aid) but with mind-control utilizing the facial nerves or so-called dormant facial hearing system. It is thus exceedingly unwelcome that Puharich would make reference to pilots, considering his work for the US Air Force and barely-concealed work on mind-control.

He went on to mention in the patent:

In accordance with the principles of the present invention, highly efficient transdermal energy transfer to the facial nerve system and the simultaneous creation of an acoustic stimulus from a transdermal signal may be accomplished with the new transducers...

... the new transducer is mounted on an ear [cushion] of rubber or similar sponge-like, resilient material...

In the first sentence, Puharich talked about the typical implementation of the invention, the "k" implanted on the facial nervous system. In the second sentence, he was talking about the actual fabrication of the "k" being in a rubber form or having a rubberized consistency of exceptional resilience; what we might call a "smart" material in the 21st century, namely "k". Furthermore, he made reference to an ear, or the implantation of "k" in the ear of the pilot that will be discussed in the final section.

Remember Don Elkins, Carla Rueckert's partner in L/L Research, who committed suicide in 1984? He was noted in the literature as being an ex-pilot. When he died, Carla Rueckert's channelling suddenly ended, commensurate with Don Elkins being implanted with "k", if I'm not at all mistaken.

It is to be noted by authorities that the V2k invention can be held accountable for aviation hijacking and aviation disasters of the 21st century. And I use the word "authorities" loosely, as it remains to be seen who is an authority in this matter.

Both Arthur M Young and Puharich have long since died, while the invention has endured and made its way into the community, which is a serious indictment on the US government and her agencies, knowing, as we now do, that aviation is unsafe as long as the V2k invention exists unchallenged and unchecked.

I might say the same for all forms of vehicular transport, inclusive of cars, trucks, boats, ferries, trains, planes, helicopters and submarines, all of which could be affected by the hijacking nature of the V2k invention and thus subjected to possible violent vehicular accidents and mishaps, of which the “authority” should be aware and ashamed of, if they had the wit to do so.

The other Major Electromagnetic Mind Control Projects

While reading up on the electromagnetic mind-control programs, I came upon the entry for MKDELTA, as follows:

MK-DELTA, 1960, CIA:

Fine-tuned electromagnetic subliminal programming

Targeting: Long Range

Frequencies: VHF HF UHF Modulated at ELF

Transmission and Reception: Television antennae, radio antennae, power lines, mattress spring coils, modulation on 60 Hz wiring.

Purpose: programming behavior and attitudes in general population

Pseudonym: "Deep Sleep", R.H.I.C.

And although I cannot pretend to know all the contents of the above mind-control project, it is clear that some, perhaps much, of MKDELTA has been incorporated into V2k. I refer specifically to the “behavior dysfunction and social criminality” effect mentioned.

Countless Targeted Individuals have claimed that they are targeted by criminality, especially petty criminality and petty home invasions, etc. It’s furthermore clear that MKDELTA is highly compatible with McCulloch’s feedback invention, disseminating behavioral dysfunction and criminality in the general population, in which “feedback in social systems” can be configured, through the application of dire frequencies, to produce social criminality.

And during my tenure as a Targeted Individual, I have been without doubt subjected to RFMEDIA. It is reputedly used on media professionals such as whistleblower journalist types. Although I am a media professional, I can see that the Buzzsaw is not exclusive used on journalists and editors, but broadly on Targeted Individuals of all walks of life and professions.

In addition to the mind-reading and upload to television and radio, RFMEDIA has a profound effect on all types of media, including print and online media, even advertising.

As an example, I had a somewhat heavy discussion with a family member one day; a philosophical discussion to do with Christianity, in which I likened the human race to a baby having a spiritual serpent, Satan the devil of the Christian Bible, in its cot.

Two days later, the newspaper billboard on the street, advertising a sensational current news story in order to sell more newspapers, read: “Snake bites baby in his cradle!”

I’m certain that the baby was saved by medical staff and survived. But the baby unwittingly gave us an insight into V2k mind-control and RFMEDIA. It’s abundantly clear that the V2k frequencies were dispatched by the invention to opportunistically hunt for and proactively create a similar scenario to the one harvested from my mind. Then, through RFMEDIA, the story ended up in the newspaper, after which I witnessed the billboard as yet another mind-reading harassment event.

So in other words, V2k mind-control and RFMEDIA can “read” and manipulate events in the environment. Even the lowly, unfortunate snake, which was no doubt killed by an angry dad, was mind-controlled to do the bidding of the perpetrators! It would probably not have bitten the baby had it not been for perpetrator frequencies.

As another example of RFMEDIA, I sold a product online, and I would receive daily spoof email orders, sometimes simply as a reminder that I was being harassed and other times containing keywords I had recently uttered, delivered directly to my inbox.

The perpetrators drove any real customers away using business interference feedback and would send an exhausting amount of automated inquiries instead; question upon question already answered in the FAQs. None of it resulted in real sales, a frustrating but predictable situation.

Worse, they would concurrently send a neverending force of social feedback mind-control victims, who would extensively engage my time with queries and never place an order, so that I would be forever detained in the situation while any financial reward was withheld; a major timewaster.

So let’s take a brief look at how RFMEDIA works. The harassment of the perpetrators using RFMEDIA is based on the use of keywords. This is a concept that everyone can understand, because the very same concept is used by Google, the world’s most widely-used search engine. The whole concept of Google is based on typing keywords into a search panel, in order to return results based on those keywords.

RFMEDIA works on a similar principle. Let’s say that the perpetrators harvest a “packet” of information from the Targeted Individual’s mind during a mind-reading event. The packet will then contain a list of words and phrases from which the invention automatically isolates a set of keywords that the perpetrators can review manually at their discretion and use during their automated processes with nefarious consequences.

As I have mentioned before, RFMEDIA - and presumably some or all of the other major electromagnetic mind-control projects that were tabled thereafter - are extensions or plugins that work with Project Moonstruck to increase the range of options open to the perpetrators during criminal harassment activities.

But there is something more to the scenario than meets the eye. The perpetrator frequencies have the ability to go into the environment and use “read” and “write” capabilities. Just as one would copy or “write” to a compact disc (CD) during computer operations, the frequencies of V2k can similarly “read” and “write” to the environment, and even “overwrite”, such as in the case of “overwriting” the flight plans of airplanes so that they are brought into range of a Targeted Individual.

The Moon, only Amplified

At the time of writing the latter portion of this book, it was late 2016; the middle of November to be exact.

On the 14th of November 2016, an unusual astronomical phenomenon occurred: a so-called “giant moon” or “supermoon” - or the third and closest of three such supermoons visible during 2016 - was seen all over the world, due to the moon being the closest to earth that it's been in 68 years. The previous closest supermoon, according to astronomers, occurred on 26 January 1948. So, what happened back in 1948?

In 1948, Puharich and McCulloch invented V2k and feedback in social systems at Bellevue psychiatric institute, four years before the invention was actually tabled and ratified by the CIA in the Pentagon in 1952, as Project Moonstruck.

It appears that the beginning and the end - the Alpha and Omega - of Project Moonstruck has coincided precisely with the moon's closest pass to earth on two occasions; the first being the Alpha in 1948 when Moonstruck was invented, the Omega being 2016, the year in which Moonstruck mind-control was exposed, in the interest of ending the out-of-control invention.

This is fairly shocking and unexpected development to me, as a Targeted Individual who's ostensibly seen it all, as I was not aware of the supermoon phenomenon until 14 November 2016 when I heard about it for the first time on the news as a newsmaker.

We even went outdoors at the proposed time to view the supermoon, but unfortunately could not see it due to overcast conditions and cloud cover.

It is interesting to note that in 1948 there was one supermoon, but in 2016 there were three. This in itself is significant, because it shows that the invention started small (one moon) and then multiplied into what we have today (three moons), where every perpetrator has a copy of the invention.

This is similar to the entry on Project Trident, another of the major electronic mind-control projects, where the "display" of the project is notarized as "Black helicopters flying in triad formation of three". What's significant here is that "three" does not actually mean three (3) (farmer explanation), but a multiplicity of something; where there is a lot of it.

I had no idea that Moonstruck V2k mind-control could enjoy an actual niche within the astronomical alignment of planetary bodies. But I would imagine this is so because of the extreme impact and extreme trauma that Project Moonstruck has inflicted not only on the human race, but the spiritual community as well over the past 70 years, all of whom have been horrifically affected by the invention for an infinite number of reasons.

During the late 1940s and early 1950s, the military industrial complex spearheaded a number of research projects on the topic of psychic abilities. According to the literature, Puharich was involved with one of them, Project Penguin, that had taken place in Glen Cove, close to his home, in 1948, the year in which he and McCulloch collaborated on Radiohead experimentation at Bellevue, that old psychiatric institute.

It was during this experiment - Project Penguin, not Moonstruck - that the head of the project, a man by the name of Rexford Daniels, and indeed Puharich, became convinced that there's an "intelligent force" that operates throughout the universe on the principle of electromagnetic frequencies and that "human beings can mentally interact with it" (The Stargate Conspiracy).

Having been implanted with electromagnetic material, I have had the privilege, over the years, to interact with the spiritual community from time to time - bona fide spirits, begotten both in and out of Fancy.

Without exception, they expressed their extreme unhappiness with V2k and deep distress over the situation, condemning V2k and all that it stands for. It was hard for me to see usually joyous and uplifted spirits succumb to sorrow and lamentation over V2k.

The Grid Exit Method, Part Two

It is ultimately with liberation in mind, that I now turn my attention to the Grid Exit Method part two. It is imperative for those reading this to already be familiar with the Grid Exit Method part one, published in The Truth Will Set You Free in 2011, in order to proceed here.

In summary, in the Grid Exit Method part one, there are a number of therapies needed in order to kick-start the process of getting rid of “k”. The method calls for the use of LENS feedback therapy, the use of isochronic tones, a piezoelectric crystal in chunk form and visiting a microwave tower regularly, all super beneficial to a V2k or Electronic Harassment victim.

However, since 2010, the year in which the previous books were written, I have learnt a lot more about the nature of “k”, where it is implanted, and how to get rid of it, which I now wish to share with Targeted Individuals.

So, having reviewed the Grid Exit Method part one, what else can a Targeted Individual do to combat Electronic Harassment? What can be done to truly put perpetrators completely out of commission?

The Fish and Chip Shop Prophecy

The first therapy I’d like to discuss is the consumption of alcohol.

Right at the beginning of my major targeting as a V2k victim in 2008, I was listening to feedback, when a voice came through on the feedback mechanism and started speaking to me in a conversational manner.

At the time I didn’t even yet know that I was a V2k victim and conversed freely with the voice in my mind, using the synthetic telepathy supplied by the V2k invention, had I only but known. The voice - a male - asked me if I was having “telepathy problems”. I said yes, that there were strangers talking to me in my mind and that I was also talking back to them using my mind.

I told the voice that I believed a telepathic “portal” had opened in my mind and that I wished to close it in the best interest of everyone concerned, as I was afraid of the consequences an open telepathic portal might produce.

As you can see, I was clearly in a state of mind-control and that my thoughts were begotten in McCulloch’s Fancy. At the time I was sitting in a fish and chip shop alone, where I had just ordered a fish burger for lunch, which is uncharacteristic, as I wouldn’t ordinary eat a fish burger.

The voice replied, saying that he, too, had experienced a telepathic problem “twenty years ago”, involving him and all his friends. He told me that there was a way to get rid of it, and advised me, verbatim, to “stay drunk for a month”.

At the time, I thought the voice was making fun of me, perhaps pulling my leg, because I had a history with alcohol. I had been sober for seven years, having given up on a partying and booze lifestyle earlier in my life, as one inevitably does, in order to raise young children in a decent manner and have a proper career, in my case in the publishing industry, a lifelong ambition.

But the voice persisted, reiterating that I should “stay drunk” in the interest of ending the telepathy or closing the so-called “telepathic portal” of my Fancy. It was only years later that I realized that the voice was not from the perpetrators but a friend, giving me advice.

It was an odd occurrence on that day, because, across the parking lot from the fish and chip shop, was a liquor emporium. And as I ate my fish burger ordered in a state of Fancy, I was looking upon the liquor shop where, years later, I ended up buying much of the liquor that I consumed in the interest of getting rid of the “k”, in a precognitive prediction.

I abandoned the half-eaten fish burger and went to the liquor store, where I bought a six-pack of the exact same lager that I started purchasing many years later, and took it home to my mother’s house, where I lived at the time without my kids, jobless and in a state of mind-control.

But when my mother saw the six-pack, she was understandably livid and banned all alcohol from the house with immediate effect, confiscating the lager and making it inaccessible. After that, I dutifully endured the feedback torture for several months more, before being able to move out and take control for the first time, by consuming the alcohol I had been advised to drink by the voice.

After I started investigating V2k, I discovered that the physical structure of polymer (short-chain polymer bonds) can be successfully weakened and dissolved by a compound in alcohol called ethanol or ethyl alcohol.

It was then that I realized that Targeted Individuals are not usually the drinking type and most are opposed to alcohol, trying to do the right thing in life by not drinking, having a clean lifestyle and trying to beat Electronic Harassment by praying, blogging and reaching out to one another.

And this is what the perpetrators are relying on; that Targeted Individuals will treat them fairly and allow the harassment to continue unabated. Or, as my perpetrator once said to me: “Take your punishment like a woman.”

So I propose that you stop treating the perpetrators fairly and start playing as smart and dirty as they do, taking the battle to them. This can be done as easily as having a glass or two of wine or a pint of lager, in combination with the other therapies recommended in the Grid Exit Method parts one and two.

The consumption of alcohol is one of the easiest ways to get rid of V2k, although I don’t advocate drinking, on its own, as being the most effective. Drinking is a chemical therapy that still needs to be augmented by mechanical, electromagnetic therapies in order to effectively remove the “k” overall.

And I suppose it is my duty here, after advocating the use of alcohol, to mention that the excessive use of alcohol is dangerous to one’s health and that one must always drink responsibly! Alcohol is also age-restricted in most countries and banned in Muslim countries, so be sure to comply with your country’s laws at all times.

Another chemical therapy that is very effective is the use of cannabis. Although illegal in most countries, THC (Tetrahydrocannabinol) in cannabis - and especially strains high in THC - destroys short-chain polymers (“k”) as effectively, if not more effectively, than alcohol.

If you are lucky enough to live in a country or state where cannabis is decriminalized, the cannabis can be smoked recreationally and medicinally. But there are other ways to use it too. I have, for example, brewed the cannabis to make cannabis tea. I would drink a half a cup of the tea and use the left-over cooled tea to anoint my head and face, at which time the “k” in several locations would perish.

I would use cannabis on a daily basis in various forms and I suggest that you do likewise, if legally practical. If at all possible, move to a place where cannabis is decriminalized in order to enjoy the full benefits of cannabis usage, not in a recreational sense, but as therapy against the V2k polymer.

The Nervous Integration of Physiological Harassment

If you, as a Targeted Individual were to ask me, in an interview, what is the single-most important aspect of V2k, I would say that it is the six senses that humans have.

So let’s look at five of these senses, in order to understand V2k and to spoil it is an invention. The first five, most basic of senses are sight, hearing, taste, smell and touch.

These five senses also serve as a basis for V2k.

When the perpetrator goes about polymerizing a Targeted Individual using R-PECVD, all the senses of the Targeted Individual are involved. During implantation, a Targeted Individual will be subjected to a cloud of plasma afterglow, in which the plasma makes a phase-transition deposition of solid material (plasma directly to solid) on all nerves being actively used by the Targeted Individual at the time of implantation.

These include optic nerves of the eyes, audio nerves of the ear, nerves of taste to do with the tongue, olfactory nerves to do with smell and the receptors of touch, such as those found in the hands and feet.

The feet are especially targeted by perpetrators because they anchor the Targeted Individual to the ground by means of gravity; whereas ELF prefers to move through solid objects, such as the ground and structures, rather than through the air. This is not to say that ELF cannot move through the air, only that it prefers grounded structures, entering the Targeted Individual through the soles of their feet.

Perpetrators fabricate their “k” on all five nervous integrations of the human sensory state by default, thus enabling them to hijack all five of the senses in their targeting. Eyes are a perennial favorite, but hands and feet are also a favorite, along with other essential and involuntary bodily functions, such as the lungs and the diaphragm in the very act of breathing, the liver in terms of digestion and the regulation of hormones, in the act of eating and the throat, in the act of speaking.

Let's look back at the story of Dorothy Martin, vintage prototype Targeted Individual of 1954, for example. Towards the beginning of her unseemly story, documented in When Prophecy Fails by Festinger et al, Martin spoke about her arm appearing to have extrasensory perception:

“I felt a kind of tingling or numbness in my arm, and my whole arm felt warm right up to the shoulder,” she once remarked later, in describing the incident. “I had the feeling that someone was trying to get my attention...”

The above constitutes the typical modus operandi of perpetrators, in this case Puharich himself and Lawrence, hijacking Martin's hand and arm, commensurate with the voice-to-skull that she inevitably started hearing later during her ordeal and the stop/start mind-control/Fancy she experienced, starring extraterrestrials and the landings of UFOs.

The hand of the Targeted Individual, possibly the left hand, but not necessarily so, is essential to V2k operations. At the beginning of my targeting in which I experienced both body-control and V2k mind-control, the perpetrators manipulated my hands, perhaps checking that their implantation had been successful, before going on to implement full-blown voice-to-skull in their operation.

My recommendation in this regard, in order to start undermining the perpetrator's efforts immediately, is to purchase the crystal, Lithium Lepidolite, already mentioned in The Truth Will Set You Free, in a chunk form and hold it in your hand or hands.

The result of grasping the crystal in your hand will start to undo the “Martin Effect”, in which perpetrators have free reign of the Targeted Individual's hand and arm.

Having discussed the five senses and involuntary bodily functions used by the perpetrators, we now also add the sixth sense, the elusive sense that has no basis in accepted science, but is indeed accepted as a credible sense in paranormal circles, namely the psychic sense, or the ability to “mentally interact” with the unseen or non-physical world, commensurate with Project Penguin, Puharich's other research objective.

The paranormal state of a Targeted Individual has much to do with the polymerization of the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous pathways identified by Puharich during his study of the nervous integration of human beings, as well as his extensive research with paranormal frequencies that took up much of his time.

Essentially, when the perpetrators hijack the first five senses and involuntary bodily functions, they get to hijack the sixth sense for free, in what I would describe as a bonus round of hijacking: six for the price of five, I would say, if I were a merchant.

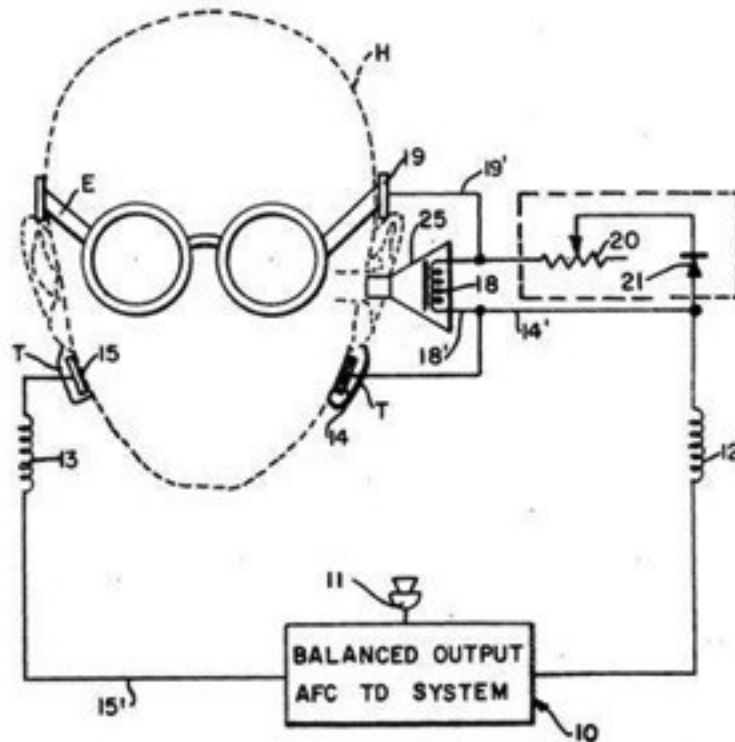

Yet it is the targeting of the sixth sense that defines the targeting overall; the voice-to-skull coupled to a psychic precognitive sense and an endless chain of environmental synchronicities that threaten the mental wellbeing of the target and opens up channels for remote murder, suicide and other crossover psychological/parapsychological eventing.

The Ear and the Eeriness of a Targeted Individual

But it is to the second sense that we must now go, namely the sense of hearing, in order to understand and close down the sixth sense, or the nefarious use of the sixth sense by perpetrators that so many Targeted Individuals have experienced and complained about.

Let's go back to the time when Puharich was experimenting with his intellectual buddy, Dr Rosen, on the ear-hearing system and Puharich's alternative, the facial-hearing system. During that timeframe, Puharich learned to incorporate the actual ear - the structure of the ear itself and the sense of hearing - into his V2k invention.

Nothing describes what follows as well as the leading image on Puharich's first patent numbered 2995633, namely Means for Aiding Hearing, published in 1958 with Dr Lawrence, in which the ear plays a vital and remarkably prominent role, according to the wording of the patent and my own, personal experience, not only as the author of The 7 Keys to V2k, but as a veteran Targeted Individual.

Allow me to explain the image in all its apparent complexity, for there are several levels of understanding to this picture. First of all, the above image, part of the original mind-control patent series, appears to have vanished from Google Patents since I wrote The 7 Keys to V2k in 2010.

This, the leading image in Puharich's patent series, the very picture of Moonstruck mind-control, could have been deliberately removed from the public domain just as other entries on military V2k seem to have been removed from the internet from time to time, reportedly by the military themselves.

In the first instance, it is clear that the invention has to do with the human head or skull. The dotted line depicting the skull does not inspire confidence because it means that the skull is penetrable or permeable, and not at all impenetrable, as a skull should be, if rendered in a solid line.

Who recalls the comment made by McCulloch about “structures heretofore inaccessible”, in which he was actually referring to the skull of the human and how activities within it could be recorded forthwith, by the intelligence community? This image, published years after McCulloch’s involvement, depicts the breaching of the skull in a remarkably simplistic manner, perhaps accounting for its disappearance from the web sometime after the publishing of The 7 Keys to V2k.

The ears, likewise, are rendered in a dotted line, indicating permeability or an entrance to the skull, to which Puharich paid particular attention during his tandem research with hearing specialist Dr Rosen.

Note the dotted lines used to portray the left ear, as well as the small canal leading into it. This is significant because the left ear - more so than the right ear - is implicated in V2k. But it is the triangular appendage marked with the number 25 that is of the greatest significance.

So, what’s significant about this? Let’s just say that Puharich, a vintage practitioner, used an age-old concept on Targeted Individuals to make his invention work. In the rather ridiculous image below, you will see an old-fashioned gentleman using a vintage hearing aid, called an ear trumpet, used by hard-of-hearing persons in the early 20th century.

An ear trumpet, such as the one portrayed in the picture, is a tubular or funnel-shaped device that collects sound waves and channels them into the ear, serving as a hearing aid. This results in the strengthening of sound energy to the eardrum and thus better hearing for a deaf or hard-of-hearing individual.

In a Targeted Individual, the left inner and outer ear are most receptive to sound. The reason for this is that the ears are enervated and that the nerves of the inner and outer ear are especially and extensively polymerized with miniaturized material so that it effectively turns the ear into a mini hearing trumpet.

Much of the polymer that fabricates itself on the nervous structure of the face and head during R-PECVD fabricates itself upon the nerves of the ear. This requires the dedicated removal of “k” from the ear structure, which is, in fact, the subject of the Grid Exit Method part two.

The concept of V2k is based primarily upon the implantation of piezoelectric material in a miniaturized, rubberized form on the facial nervous system and now, the ear-hearing system and actual physical structure of the ear itself.

In my eight years as a Targeted Individual, I formulated a strategy to get rid of the “k” in the ear, thereby ending the V2k and assault on all senses, including the sixth sense, and by implication external harassments such as Gangstalking and airplanes.

The ultimate solution to resolving V2k is to put a powerful piezoelectric crystal into the ear - the left ear - and wear it in the ear as long and as often as possible.

I propose the use of a pendulum, a small, pyramid-shaped object used in dowsing. These dowsing crystals are made of superior piezoelectric materials but have a sharp point. The original pendulum must first be cut to remove the sharp tip, before it can be worn in the ear with safety and comfort.

The hematite pendulum is first cut and then faceted into a usable object. When modified thus, the pendulum works to get rid of the polymer on an ongoing basis, producing a steady and powerful piezoelectric impedance mismatch that causes the short-chain polymers fabricated within the ear to break down and disengage from the audio nerves.

In a humorous story I remember that, several years ago, I was wearing the modified pendulum in my ear when suddenly the perpetrator spoke to me directly via a microphone and, referring to the pendulum, said, verbatim, “What is this thing?!” He then aggressively tried to vibrate the pendulum out of my ear, saying that the “thing” was no good and that I should take it out!

What the perpetrator was saying is that the strong piezoelectric pendulum was causing a problem in his operations, corrupting the “k” on a structural and frequency level and thus compromising the feedback, to which he took exception on account of his meticulously-laid plans, as a perpetrator with unstoppable ambitions.

But from a Targeted Individual perspective, the modified pendulum is gold, because it really hits perpetrators and their self-serving ambitions where it hurts; right at the heart of their operations: the left ear, as a channel into the skull, where, according to Puharich’s image, it leads to making the skull penetrable and accessible, as in McCulloch’s vision of “heretofore inaccessible” but now-penetrable structures depicted with the dotted line.

Recall how Puharich himself described his invention as a hearing aid, and how Bep Hermans, his second wife asked what had become of the so-called hearing aid and its application, an answer which Puharich was not prepared to give her. Well, Puharich indeed invented a hearing aid, as he claimed, but the clincher is that his hearing aid was not designed to aid hard-of-hearing individuals.

In the spirit of mind-control double-talk, Puharich was not referring to the hard-of-hearing in a literal sense. He was talking on another level altogether, saying that Targeted Individuals are “hearing impaired” because they refuse to “get the message” that they are unwanted or undesirable in the (perpetrator) community, hence the “hearing aid” supplied by the perpetrators and the ongoing interpersonal harassment (Gangstalking) emerging from within the community by means of McCulloch's mind-control feedback in social systems.

When you strip down the scenario and remove the grandiose aspect so common to the perceptions begotten in Fancy by Targeted Individuals, you come to realize that Targeted Individuals are dealing with human beings -perpetrators - who have something to lose, if Targeted Individuals were to be free and non-polymerized individuals.

Therefore the challenge of the Targeted Individual is to re-render the skull in a solid line again, instead of a dotted one, as depicted in Puharich's image. In order to achieve this, the Targeted Individual must do a number of things.

The first of these is to believe, if not me, then Terry L Milner in Ratting out Puharich, because he knew Puharich and was geometrically opposed to Puharich's life work. To me, the choice is an easy one, not because I have already gotten rid of most of my "k", but because to believe in the prevailing experts on V2k, such as Eleanor White and FFCBS maintains the status quo.

In the current status quo, the focus appears to be on educating non-Targeted Individuals (the public) on the existence of V2k, a notion that doesn't even make it past the front door.

In review of the longevity of V2k, the invention has been upon us for 68 years, as of 2016. In the latter portion of that time, Eleanor White has been in charge. She'll deny it, of course, and say something like, "I never said I was in charge." But Eleanor White is the de facto leader of the Targeted Individual community, and a poor one, at that.

Under her watch, perpetrators have become emboldened to such an extent that they believe it is their God-given right to do V2k mind-control. When I was getting rid of the "k", my perpetrator reacted with outrage mixed with venom and punished me severely, as though I was meddling with his absolute right to do to me whatever he wanted!

Such a perpetrator mindset has proliferated under Eleanor's watch, even as no Targeted Individual has ever walked away from V2k mind-control during her tenure and never will. In her vision for Targeted Individuals, everyone must remain in a protracted state of Electronic Harassment and suffer "V2s" together, forever blogging about Gangstalking and the baseball hand-signals used during community stalking, like a farmer.

Therefore, in the interest of Targeted Individuals who may actually be interested in getting rid of "k" that causes V2k, or, to put it bluntly, my anti-mind-control program, I will review the Grid Exit Method in full.

The Grid Exit Method is based on three functional principles: piezoelectricity, electromagnetism and frequencies. The implanted material is piezoelectric in that it has the properties of a ceramic or crystal. The material is electromagnetic, meaning that it can interact with radio frequencies.

Thus the Grid Exit Method is frequency-based and makes use of piezoelectric, electromagnetic and other frequencies to destroy the "k" material, just as the perpetrators use similar electromagnetic means to fabricate their piezoelectric material upon the nervous integrations in an act of chemical vapour deposition agitated to perform as instructed, by electromagnetic means.

For more in-depth information on the implantation of R-PECVD, be sure to purchase and download The Truth Will Set You Free, second edition, available in the Electric Angel online shop.

In the first step, Targeted Individuals are advised to go to a LENS therapist and undergo LENS therapy for the duration of therapy. Alternatively, the Targeted Individual can hire an EEG machine and use it at home as per the instructions, several times a week.

In the second step, Targeted Individuals make use of Isochronic Tones, or Sine Waves (frequencies), that are freely downloadable from the Internet and listened to.

In the third step, the Targeted Individual visits a microwave tower regularly and sits below it for a time, perhaps on a daily basis, taking advantage of the antagonistic microwave frequencies emanating from the tower that breaks down “k”.

In the fourth step, Targeted Individuals purchase two piezoelectric crystals, one in chunk form called Lithium Lepidolite and the other in a pendulum form, called Hematite. The chunk of Lithium Lepidolite is used to hold in the hand or place on the head or face or on the body. The modified Hematite pendulum is meant to be worn in the left ear, at the wearer’s convenience.

In the (optional but recommended) fifth step, the Targeted Individual is encouraged to consume alcohol in a limited and responsible manner, and partake of cannabis, where legally available and advisable, as two forms of chemical therapy that complement the other electromagnetic and piezoelectric therapies recommended.

I have found that a mix of all the above therapies work best, in which a Targeted Individual incorporates all, or as many of, the steps outlined above, into a daily routine. In practice, The Grid Exit Method puts steady pressure on the perpetrators and their polymer infrastructure, so be prepared to follow the steps every day, for one year to several years.

And don’t be at all surprised if the perpetrators take umbrage and roll out punitive action. Readers of The 7 Keys to V2k and The Truth Will Set You Free reported that their harassment unfortunately increased after reading the books and using the Grid Exit Method, meaning that the Targeted Individuals were successful in challenging the perpetrators and as such, were being blackballed with an escalation of unpleasant physiological punitive measures, into abandoning the Grid Exit Method as a solution!

The Conclusion

Mind-control, voice-to-skull, V2k, vehicular accidents and the like: what an indescribable mess. What carnage of a violence-mongering, wrecking-ball nature! Project Moonstruck and her subsequent mind-control offspring programs; institutionalized psychological warfare against lowly civilians with no defence: incorrigibly depraved and unforgivable.

Feedback in biological systems: the introduction of cybernetic entities into the environment. How deplorable and horrific and heartbreaking, with no mitigation factors whatsoever!

Feedback in social systems, with the inclusion of criminality in social systems (MKDELTA): how disgusting and disruptive of the social order, to which we are all lawfully subscribed and abiding!

Telling Targeted Individuals that they have no recourse: how unutterably despicable and criminal without end!

How irresponsible of US military intelligence and indescribably abusive of the civilians they are sworn to protect. How arrogant of the Pentagon, the CIA, the Navy, the Air Force and the National Security Agency, for treating V2k victims like V2k does not exist!

It is to be said that the US government has trashed all moral consciousness in the execution of V2k mind-control; that the repulsive invention annihilates all that is good, decent and of upstanding and moral calibre.

However, having lambasted the US government from here into the next century for producing the V2k invention for which they are now officially and lawfully culpable, it is to be said that they, the US government, are not generally the ones who are using the V2k invention on civilian targets in the 21st century.

It can be intuited that the V2k invention - a mix of Project Moonstruck, Project Penguin, MKDELTA, RFMEDIA and the like - are obsolete programs; deregistered for military use, but not yet declassified.

As I have stated before, the current alphabet agencies, including the CIA and FBI, appear to collectively have no recollection of the early mind-control projects, such as Project Moonstruck.

This obsolescence, however, has triggered an unspeakable wave of abuse at civilian level. First, the US government produced the invention and used it on civilian targets. Then they ostensibly stopped using the invention but failed to declassify it. Then they forgot about the invention altogether and failed to take new victims of the invention seriously.

In other words, first the US government produced, developed and adopted V2k and then, later, abandoned V2k; but not before they let it get away. The V2k invention slipped through their fingers and made its way back into a civilian underground; moreover into an academic underground.

To my mind, this is a national and international treason of the highest order. Letting the V2k invention get away, is just as bad as producing the invention in the first place! Not only did they let it get away, they summarily dismissed it, so that Targeted Individuals were forced to take the full brunt of the invention, while everyone turned their backs on them!

As such, my question to US Congress, that is yet to debate the unpalatable steak if not the peas of appeasement, is as follows: now that the US government is aware of V2k, how does it plan to put the evil genie back into the bottle?

Once the likes of Puharich, McCulloch, Tibbets, Hammond and Lawrence had applied themselves fully to creating V2k mind-control, how does Congress propose to put the whole family of “intellectual uglies” as well as their frequency-based invention, under lockdown, in order to assure that this never happens again?

The simple answer is that frequency-based violations cannot be put under lockdown altogether, considering the vast amount of Targeted Individuals that can be found not only in the United States, but all over the world.

However, we, as Targeted Individuals of the 21st century have a number of demands that can be met without too much effort required from the US government.

Our first demand is a very simple one: that Targeted Individuals be immediately acknowledged as victims of Project Moonstruck.

Our second demand is that the US government acknowledges the fact that the V2k invention and Project Moonstruck has gone rogue, and is attractive and available to criminals.

Our third demand is that Targeted Individuals be acknowledged as victims of military-grade psychological warfare and accorded the necessary respect.

Our fourth demand is another simple one: that Targeted Individuals no longer be diagnosed by the psychiatric profession as schizophrenics. Psychiatrists are certainly not authorities on the creation and abuse of cybernetic entities.

Our fifth demand is that the judiciary be sensitized to the existence of Project Moonstruck and that Targeted Individuals are recognized before the law, however upsetting to the current judicial paradigm it may be.

Our sixth demand of the US government is that the use of V2k within any of its organizations, if at all practiced, be immediately terminated and purged, never to be resumed again.

Our final demand is that Project Moonstruck and the rest of the so-called Major Electronic Mind-Control Projects be declassified.

We also have further demands regarding R-PECVD and polymer sciences:

We demand that university faculties with a focus on polymer sciences and engineering be placed under immediate scrutiny and alumni and present students be put on a watch-list for potentially unethical conduct.

We demand that ethics classes be taught at such establishments, to discourage the burgeoning amount of graduates from seeking V2k torture methodology as a career opportunity.

We demand that any nanotechnology or micro-technology machines in commercial life be regulated on a highly controlled list with immediate effect.

We demand that all unregulated, privately-owned micro-technology machines be immediately deemed illegal and predatory; the use of which machines will be seen as irregular and life-threatening to the community; a criminal offence for possessing one.

Having made these sweeping demands with no small amount of personal apprehension, it is up to all Targeted Individuals to get rid of the V2k. Waiting for the US government to act in the interest of moonstruck victims would be most unwise.

It is the responsibility of each and every Targeted Individuals to end not only feedback in his or her own biological system, but also feedback in social systems.

It remains to be said that picketing, demonstrations, memorandums and demands are in order when contemplating the government and perpetrators' use of the dormant facial hearing system and invisible R-PECVD technology, to mind-control an individual.

Only then can we be truly free of V2k mind-control and no sooner.

Until then, I am the resistance.

Yours in anti-mind-control, Electric Angel
